Fists Swung As Filibuster Is Smashed By House Gag

Republican Rout Paves Way for Passage of Roosevelt Program.

Senate to Ballot On Tariff Monday

Bankhead Forces Vote as Lower Chamber Acts on Rule.

By Robert C. Albright.

Crushing into submission a spectacular Republican filibuster, House Democrats yesterday threw the weight of their ponderous majority behind a rule that made history, clothing leaders with power to rush through the Administration's program.

Invoking procedure that called to mind the days of the House "czars," the rule snuffed out the life of the opposition movement. Feeling ran high. Fists flew in the chamber for the first time this session.

On the other side of the Capitol, leaders resorted to less rigorous, but just as effective, methods to cut short the Senate tariff filibuster. A unanimous consent agreement was reached to vote on the bill late Monday.

Greeted With Cat-Calls.

With cheers from Democrats, catcalls and hisses from Republicans, greeted the move in the House to cut short minority heckling that in two days had forced 13 roll calls and a complete reading of the House journal.

The unprecedented "gag" was whipped into shape in the early afternoon. It sped through the Rules Committee and unexpectedly called up in the House by Representative William B. Bankhead, Democratic wheelhorse and father of Tallulah, of stage fame.

The near fist fight occurred when Representative Braswell Deen, Georgia first termer, tried to dissuade John H. Hoepple, California, from bolting the Democrats in voting on the rule.

Pair Push Each Other.

High-spirited Ralph R. Eltse, California Republican, saw Deen tug at Hoepple's coat. Eltse started after the Georgian and the next moment the two were pushing each other in the aisle. It took Sergeant at Arms Kenneth Romney to break up the scrap.

When the House quieted down, leaders in three successive roll call votes effectively wielded their 200 majority to force approval of the measure that many believe blocks any chance of a vote on bank "payoff," 30-hour week and inflation petitions, that have harassed leaders all session. Approval was by votes of 233 to 91, 238 to 89, and 259 to 92, respectively.

Only five Democrats joined Hoeppel in voting against final passage. They were Connery, Massachusetts; Crosser and Sweeney, Ohio, and blind Matthew Dunn, Pennsylvania.

Crosser's vote came as a surprise. He is chairman of the Democratic Steering Committee, but unsuccess-

Clinic Guards 5-&-10 Princess

London, June 1 (AP).—Franklin L. Hutton found his daughter, Princess Barbara Hutton Mdivani, in a medical clinic here today and was visibly annoyed about something after he visited her.

Hutton, who had been in a fine humor when his son-in-law, Prince Alexis Mdivani, greeted him at Southampton, appeared angry after he and Mrs. Hutton had been with their daughter for an hour and a half.

The Huttons did not reveal what had disturbed them, nor would they discuss the health of the princess, who earlier this week had been reported able to make shopping tours from her hotel.

It was not apparent whether the princess will return with her parents to the United States, but in any event the prince said he could not leave London this month, as he has considerable polo playing to do.

2 Missing as 300 Fight Michigan Forest Fire

Republic, Mich., June 1 (AP).—Two members of a fire-fighting crew were reported missing late today in a roaring timberland blaze which has swept over 3,000 acres of woods south of Ishpeming.

A crew of 300 fire fighters was battling the advancing blaze, which threatens to become one of the worst of the season. The identity of the two missing men was not immediately ascertained.

Marlene Lebowitz is safe in the arms of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Lebowitz, after an attempt to kidnap her yesterday was foiled by a quick-thinking lad.

Six-month-old Marlene Lebowitz, daughter of Samuel Lebowitz, a patent attorney, cooed secure in her crib at 1743 Hobart street northwest last night, unaware that a mysterious attempt to kidnap her yesterday morning was sending police to all parts of the city in search of her would-be abductors.

Marlene, her mother, Mrs. Sadie Lebowitz, and her father had the presence of mind of their colored maid, Mary Contee, to thank that they were happily together last night.

Two men appeared at the Lebowitz residence about 11 a. m. One remained at the wheel of the car while the other crossed the lawn to

G.O.P. Beaten In Filibuster On Tariff Bill

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Threatening a late night session and an all-day meeting today, the Senate Democratic leaders yesterday broke the back of the Republican filibuster against the Administration's reciprocal tariff bill, which loomed seriously as a jamlog to the remainder of the "New Deal" program.

By coaxing, cajoling and threatening, the Senate leaders late in the day obtained an unanimous consent agreement to vote on the tariff bill and all pending amendments at 5 p. m. Monday, meanwhile voting at noon Monday on the Johnson proposal to exempt farm products from the measure's provisions and limiting all speeches thereafter to 10 minutes.

The filibuster movement was carried on by the old guard rank and file Republicans, who wished to delay action on the tariff bill as long as possible, in order to consume time that might otherwise be used in consideration of some of the "New Deal" measures that are obnoxious to them.

McNary Aids Foes.

Republican Leader Charles L. McNary would have nothing to do with the filibuster group, disclaimed any control over them. He later cooperated with Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson and Chairman Pat Harrison, of the Finance Com-

Girl Disappears; Father Is Sought

Norfolk, Va., June 1 (Spl.).—R. R. Rush was sought by Southampton County authorities today on a warrant charging him with kidnaping his 7-year-old daughter, Kathleen. Custody of the child had been awarded to her mother in a divorce suit.

Rush is said to have called at the school in Franklin, where the child was a pupil, yesterday, and to have left with his daughter in an automobile. Neither has been seen since. Kathleen had been in the keeping of Vance Vaughan, Rush's brother-in-law.

Commonwealth's Attorney R. E. L. Watkins, of Southampton County, said he learned Rush has been living in North Carolina.

Anadale Gets Parole; Rheem Plea Is Denied

Former Aid to Pitts Wins Freedom on Claim He Was Misled.

Declaring himself the victim of misplaced loyalty, and "conscious of no wrong-doing," C. Elbert Anadale, former vice president of the F. H. Smith Co., convicted in 1930 of improper withdrawal of funds, was granted a parole yesterday by the District Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole.

At the same time, the board denied the parole petitions of Edmund D. Rheem, vice president of the defunct firm of Swartzell, Rheem & Hensey, and of Raymond L. Schreiner, former "boy" president of the Bank of Brightwood.

Rheem is serving seven years for "concealment of writings" and Schreiner three years for embezzlement.

Appearing in good health, considerably thinner than his friends remember him in the halcyon days of 1929, and looking forward hopefully to the future, Anadale has served 3½ years of a 9-year term. He will be released next week.

"I was a stupid chump," the youthful broker said yesterday in the District Jail, where he has been keeping the office books, "but I never profited by so much as a nickel.

"G. Bryan Pitts (head of the F. H. Smith firm which crashed so spectacularly in 1930) was a tin god. We all were sold on his ideas and schemes, and a lot of good men went down with him."

Irish Senate Rejects Bill to Abolish Body

Dublin Irish Free State, June 1 (AP).—The Senate today defeated by a vote of 33 to 15 the government's bill to abolish the Senate.

American Is Seized as a Spy At Naval Arsenal in France

Toulon, France, June 1 (AP).—Alert French gendarmes, ever on the lookout for spies around defense centers, nabbed an American in the naval arsenal and turned him over to judicial authorities.

The prisoner, who said he name is Anulry Nikolajeski, 38, and that he was born in Chicago, insisted, police said, that he is not a spy, but merely a tourist who wandered into the arsenal with workmen.

Nikolajeski is the third American taken into custody in connection with espionage charges in recent weeks. The others are Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gordon Switz, of East Orange, N. J. and New York, who are under examination in Paris and are said to have confessed they are spies.

The man arrested today was said by gendarmes to have lived in Germany several years. He speaks with a Russian or Polish accent. Police were unable immediately to determine his citizenship, since he carried no papers of identification.

Nikolajeski was charged with violating the espionage act, which forbids unauthorized entry to military and naval establishments.

The gendarmes quoted him as saying he had just arrived in Toulon without baggage. They questioned this statement and were attempting to trace his recent movements.

Golf Course Murder Laid To D.C. Boy

Suspect to Be Quizzed About Slaying of Girl in Maryland.

A slight, pale youth who escaped on May 19 from a cottage at the National Training School for Boys was returned here from Lexington, N. C., early last night, charged with the mysterious "golf course" murder of a Washington Terminal employe. He will be questioned also in connection with the investigation of the killing of Miss Fannie Kurz in "Lovers' Lane" at Fredericksburg, Va.

He is Ralph W. Mize, 19, who weighs only 110 pounds and only is 5 feet 6 inches tall. Mize was arrested Thursday in Lexington after a companion, Paul Yountz, was captured in Winston-Salem. He was charged with breaking and entering a Lexington filling station, according to the Associated Press.

A warrant charging Mize with the slaying of A. Paul Rice, who was beaten to death in a ravine near the Anacostia golf course, was issued yesterday by United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage. Detective Sergt. John W. Wise brought Mize to Washington.

Mize Returned.

Mize will be questioned in connection with the Kurz slaying. Department of Justice agents and police, checking Mize's activities since his escape, have traced him to a spot near the Fredericksburg Battlefield Memorial, where the fatal beating occurred. Miss Kurz' escort, Milton J. Brown, also was beaten severely.

On his cot in a Fredericksburg hospital, Brown has struggled for consciousness since the attack, May 20. He has been unable to describe the attacker, who wielded a club and left his victims for dead.

Rice was slugged to death by some one who crept up behind him. He had been visiting a friend and was taking the ravine as a short cut home. When his body was discovered, detectives learned $18 had been stolen from his pockets.

Car Abandoned.

Fleeing from the Bladensburg institution on the night of Rice's murder, Mize abandoned a car he is alleged to have stolen near the scene of the attack at La Plata, Md. He then hired a boat, crossed the Potomac and fled into Virginia, police learned.

Police further discovered that Mize was given a "lift" to a point near Fredericksburg by a man who thought him a "poor boy in need of a ride." Mize's benefactor, officers learned was a Dahlgren store-

U. S. to Force Maryland Aid

Hopkins Says State Must Give Dollar for Dollar With Government.

Federal Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins demanded yesterday that future relief allotments to Maryland be matched dollar for dollar, by funds of the State or its political subdivisions, the Associated Press reported.

Hopkins served his ultimatum at a conference attended by Gov. Ritchie, Mayor Howard W. Jackson, of Baltimore; Harry Greenstein, State relief administrator, and other Maryland relief officials.

He said the Government will take care of the State's unemployment relief needs for the next 12 months, if the condition is met.

Ritchie said Federal funds would be made available to the State immediately and the State would be given some time to make plans for raising its share.

Pair Is Found Poisoned Near Houston Street

Houston, Tex., June 1 (AP).—The bodies of a man and woman, tentatively identified as Oscar Legler, 72, and his 67-year-old wife, of La Grange, Tex., were found in a small thicket in a residential district here about 100 yards from one of the city's main thoroughfares.

The couple apparently died of poisoning a week ago. There was no indication they had been slain. Two empty glasses were lying nearby.

Desert War Truce In Arabia Extended

London, June 1 (AP).—The truce in the desert war between Saudi Arabia and Yemen has been extended for several days to give the Imam Yahya of Yemen more time to comply with conditions of the armistice, the Arabian Legation here announced today.

The Imam, said advices to the legation from Taif, where the peace conference is being held, explained that difficulties of telegraphic communication delayed complete compliance with the terms laid down by King Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia.

Senate Votes Bill Closing Alley Homes

Fund of Half Million Is Provided by House From CWA Cash.

The Senate yesterday completed legislative action on the first effective alley dwelling closing law in the history of the National Capital. Final enactment of the law marked a victory in the campaign of The Post to rid Washington of its alley housing.

Senate approval of the measure was given at the request of Senator William H. King (Democrat), Utah, who brought the measure up out of order and asked that the House amendments be agreed to, as had been recommended by the Senate District Committee the day before.

The House amendments provided that a revolving fund of $500,000 should be obtained from PWA funds allotted to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission for low-cost housing in Washington, and limited the total amount which might be paid for alley dwellings in any one block to 130 per cent of the assessed value of all the properties purchased within a given block.

The bill now goes to President Roosevelt for signature. Its passage marks the successful conclusion of a determined effort to rid Washington of its unsightly and unhealthy alley dwellings.

Directing Agency Planned.

The measure authorizes the President to designate an agency to carry out its provisions. The $500,000 revolving fund would be at the disposal of this agency. It is thought likely the President will name an existing agency familiar with the subject and conditions. The National Capital Park and Planning Commission may be named. It is believed certain that that body, along with the District Commissioners, will play an important part in carrying the program to completion.

The measure authorizes purchase of alley dwellings and their replacement by parks, or by garages or some other profit-making buildings. Returns from the sale or lease of garages, if they are built, would go back into the revolving fund for future use. The alley closing agency is authorized to cooperate with limited-dividend corporations, in carrying out the law, which also contemplates provision of housing accommodations for those compelled to move out of the alleys.

Long Fight Ends.

The battle to close the alley dwellings has been waged for more than a quarter of a century. One alley-closing law sought to achieve its object by requiring landlords to provide sanitary conveniences in the houses. The law was taken to court. There it was emasculated by a ruling that landlords were not required to provide all of the features specified. If any one, such as sewers, running water, toilets, was available, then the law was met, the court ruled.

Washington was sharply reminded of its 70-year-old alley problem this winter when a series of articles in The Post laid bare the situation and called for a remedy.

The alley houses were peopled, originally, by slaves who fled from the South during the Civil War. The first attempt to abolish them

Chicken-Coop Girl, Rescued, Given Aid

San Juan, Capistrano, Calif., June 7 (AP).—Half-starved and covered with vermin, 7-year-old Mary Ebarguarry was placed in the Orange County Hospital today to undergo treatment for malnutrition.

District Attorney S. B. Kaufman said he was preparing to file a charge against the mother, Mrs. Barney Ebarguarry, of unjustified cruelty to a minor. He said he was informed the mother and the seven brothers and sisters of the child regarded Mary as a curse upon the family.

Mrs. Ebarguarry was questioned after neighbors reported she had forced the child to spend long periods in a chicken coop.

Roosevelt Tells Nations To Pay Debts, Cut Arms; 'Blackmail,' Say British

British Decide to Bar Even Token Payment

Cabinet Intends Not to Remit Unless Default Onus Is Removed; Hoover Moratorium Blamed as Smashing International System.

London, June 1 (U.P.).—President Roosevelt's war debts message to Congress was branded as "blackmail" in influential quarters tonight.

A government spokesman admitted the message aroused violent indignation.

The cabinet decided to refuse even a "token payment" on June 15 unless such payments explicitly exonerate Great Britain of charges of default. The decision was believed communicated to Washington.

Reflecting the sentiment Mr. Roosevelt's message aroused in responsible quarters, one high authority whose identity can not be divulged, recalled that European nations owe Britain more than Britain owes the United States. He added, however, that as yet Britain had never exploited this position to tell France, for example, what to do with her army and navy.

He explained Britain paid the United States half the war debt, but still owes more than she borrowed on account of accrued interest.

One influential observer said former President Hoover smashed the system of international payments, leaving the former European allies "holding the baby." France, after the Hoover moratorium of 1931, never has been able to exact reparations from Germany, he said, while Britain was placed in a most unfair position, incapable of collecting from her war debtors.

He insisted the United States must realize the whole system of war debts crashed as result of Mr. Hoover's action.

One commentator asserted Mr.

Sympathy of U.S. People in Balance, He Says in Message.

Acclaim Is Given Stand at Capitol

Legislation Not Needed Now, Moratorium Review States.

By Kendall Foss.

President Roosevelt warned debtor governments yesterday against using their available resources for "unproductive nationalistic expenditures" instead of for repayment of their war debts if they expected the American people to continue to show a sympathetic understanding of their problems.

"Unproductive nationalistic expenditures" presumably means armaments, and was so understood in London, where influential quarters promptly termed the subtle linking of debts and disarmament "blackmail."

In sending his long-awaited war debt message to Congress the President stressed the fact the United States expects debtors to make substantial sacrifices, though not to assume impossible burdens, in discharging their obligations.

Persuasion Used on Debtors.

He said:

"We are using every means to persuade each debtor nation as to the sacredness of the obligation and also to assure them of our willingness, if they should so request, to discuss frankly and fully the special circumstances relating to means and method of payment."

He asked for no special legislation, saying that in view of all existing circumstances, legislation is neither necessary nor advisable. He added a promise to keep Congress informed from time to time and to make such new recommendations as may later seem desirable.

Most of the 3,000-word message was devoted to a review of devel-

Steel, Textile Crisis Grows; Board Urged

Johnson Proposes Special Mediators as Union Scoffs at Peace.

Smoldering embers of threatened steel and textile strikes flamed anew yesterday as Gen. Hugh S. Johnson proposed creation of a special labor board to pull the steel industry safely through the emergency.

The recovery chief, concerned by the unyielding deportment of aroused spokesmen for 400,000 workers in the two industries, held three extended conferences with textile union leaders and discussed the steel crisis with Donald Richberg, NRA general counsel.

Reports that the textile negotiators would like an opportunity to withdraw gracefully and cancel the walkout set for Monday drew bitter protest from Lawrence Reviere, New Hampshire organizer.

"We're not bluffing," he shouted. "If they think we are, let them wait until Monday."

Dispatches from Pennsylvania told of speeches by officials of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers in a move to enlist support of the steel mill-owned captive coal mines, should the steel strike begin June 16, as warned. Miners were asked to call sympathetic walkouts.

Same as Auto Strife Method.

Johnson declared he considered the best chances for solution of the steel controversy rested in appointment by the President of a separate labor board or arbitration committee—the same method used in smoothing over differences between automobile manufacturers and their employes two months ago.

Michael F. Tighe, Amalgamated president, now in Pittsburgh, will return Monday to resume peace conferences with Johnson. Both sides hoped to reach an agreement before the convening of a convention of the union in Pittsburgh, June 10.

Exchange Act Passes; Final Debate Quiet

President Expected to Sign Measure on Return to Capital.

The stock exchange control bill reached the end of a long tortuous, bitter legislative road yesterday when both houses of Congress approved the measure in the final form agreed upon by the House and Senate conferees. The bill is now ready for President Roosevelt's signature, expected soon after his return to Washington next week.

Bringing stock exchanges under Federal supervision for the first time in history, the act becomes effective July 1 except for registration provisions, which go into effect September 1 and the margin and other regulatory sections, which become operative October 1.

In contrast with the prolonged controversy which attended the shaping of the measure in its earlier stages, the final enactment came swiftly, without a roll call in either House and with little debate. The Senate acted before noon and the House late in the day, just after the turbulent floor fight over the drastic change in the rules ended.

Glass Takes No Part.

Senator Daniel O. Hastings (Republican), Delaware, and Senator Frederick Steiwer (Republican), Oregon, objected to some features of the bill. Chairman Fletcher of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, answered a few questions. The storm center of much of the earlier controversy, Senator Carter Glass, did not participate in the last discussion. No dissents were registered in the voice vote.

In the House, Chairman Rayburn of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, explained briefly the changes made in conferences to reconcile House and Senate differences. Representative Carl Mapes (Republican) Michigan, one of the conferees, voiced his regret that the bill in its final form had abandoned the House plan for setting up the Federal Trade Commission to administer the bill and to place it in the hands of a new agency.

"They will live to rue the day they made this change over to an independent commission," Mapes said, referring apparently to the

50 Are Hurt as 2,500 Jobless Battle Police in Los Angeles

Los Angeles, June 1 (AP).—At least 50 persons were injured, 1 seriously, today in a riot that resulted when police broke up a congregation of unemployed in front of the county welfare offices. Three women were arrested.

The injured included 10 of the 300 policemen and sheriff's reserves rushed to the scene within half an hour. Police estimated the crowd eventually numbered about 2,500.

Dozens of persons were knocked down by police and traffic was blocked. Police said demonstrators attacked them with clubs and stones.

Arthur Milton, 69, reported to have been a bystander, suffered a possible skull fracture, a fractured hip and other injuries, it was said at the police hospital.

A committee of unemployed from the Relief Workers Protective Union was informed by Capt. C. A. Hodson a few members could enter the building to call on Superintendent Earl E. Jensen of the charities department. A crowd attempted to follow these members in, Hobson said, and his men then were attacked.

Members of the committee said they were attacked without warning by plain-clothes policemen and were only defending themselves when they struck back at the officers.

The committee sought to present to Jensen a petition complaining that charity grocery orders were being cut down until they contained scarcely enough food for subsistence.

Demands were made for abolition of grocery orders, for $10 a week cash relief for single men, with $3 additional for each dependent, an "adequate supply" of milk, indorsement by the board of supervisors of the unemployment insurance bill in Congress and recognition of the grievance committee.

Blood Is Clew To Missing Man

Kidnap Murder Feared; Gun Mysteriously Reappears.

Towson, Md., June 1 (Spl.).—Drops of blood, marking a trail through a section of woods in the Harford road section of Baltimore County, were being investigated by county police today as a clew to the whereabouts of Rudolph A. Miller, station agent here, mysteriously missing since Wednesday night.

Police are now convinced Miller was either shot or beaten by robbers who looted the Maryland & Pennsylvania Railroad station, where Miller was agent, and then kidnaped him. It is feared he may have been killed and his body left in the woods.

Baltimore city detectives and private operatives employed by the railroad have joined county police in the investigation.

A baffling feature of the case is the mysterious reappearance of Miller's revolver in a desk in the station. When police first went to the building to investigate, Miller's gun was not in its accustomed place in the desk. Late yesterday investigators found it in exactly the place they had looked previously.

Stavisky Partner Is Sent to Prison

Paris, June 1 (AP).—The famous Stavisky trial, which for eight years lingered in French courts, came to an end today with the conviction of Sylvain Zweifel. He was sentenced to eight months in prison and fined $3.30.

Zweifel was an associate of Alex Stavisky, whose manipulations are blamed for the collapse of the Bayonne pawnshop and whose death in a villa near Switzerland is set down officially as suicide.

The action disposed of today began in 1926 with a police raid on Stavisky's villa at Marly-le-Roi, a suburb of Paris. The charges were that nearly $1,000,000 had disappeared from offices of numerous brokers. Six men were indicted. The case was postponed 26 times. All defendants but Zweifel have died or have vanished.

fully fought for a vote on his railroad 6-hour-day bill. Connery battled the rule because he saw in its terms a fatal stroke to his short work week petition, sponsored by the American Federation of Labor.

The Bankhead rule is three-pronged. It provides:

1. Suspension of the regular rules of the House will be in order at any time.

2. Majority Leader Byrns way, whenever he sees fit, move a recess of the House, and his motion will be privileged.

3. Reports from the Rules Committee will be in order at any time without the usual requirement of a two-thirds vote of the House in lieu of laying over a day.

Snell Assails Measure.

Republican Leadner Bertrand H. Snell immediately called newspapermen around him and told them the leaders had "deprived the minority of the last vestige of its rights."

"Their action is entirely in keeping with the Democratic plan to make a dictator not only out of the President, but out of the Speaker and majority leader as well," he said.

Snell said the latest mode in House "gag" rules would make the late Speaker Cannon and "Czar" Reed roll over in their graves."

"It all proves to my mind that the present Democratic majority of three to one is absolutely incompetent to run the House under their own rules," he said. "The party of boasted liberality has by this action forcibly thrown out all rules, leaving the House procedure entirely at the mercy of the Speaker and majority leader."

Rainey Stand Scored.

Snell said the Republican filibuster was staged in protest of what he called "arbitrary" action by Speaker Rainey Thursday in refusing to recognize the lack of a quorum after his own count showed only 148 members were present.

Informed of this statement, Rainey said he did not hear Representative Harold McGugin (Republican), of Kansas, make the point of no quorum. But if he had heard him, said Rainey, he would have overruled the point because he believed it was "dilatory."

Representative Allen T. Treadway, Massachusetts Republican, issued a statement upbraiding Rainey's quorum decision and assailing the new rule as the death blow to representative government.

"Never in the history of Congress," he said, "has there been anything to equal this."

Smilingly nonchalant, Democratic leaders immediately took advantage of their victory to call up today the Rayburn communications bill, consolidating control over wire services in one Government agency. A rule giving it right of way had previously been agreed to by the Rules Committee.

Debate to Be Curbed.

Monday Democrats will follow up their advantage by calling up the President's bill for public works and relief extension, under a suspension of rules allowing only 40 minutes debate and no amendments.

The Eltse-Dean pushing bout was not the only incident adding noise and color to House excitement preceding the vote on the rule.

Members gathered in little groups, gesticulating and shouting loudly. In one corner of the chamber Representatives Connery and John J. O'Connor, of New York, argued the issue to the accompaniment of gyrating fists. Mrs. Isabell Greenway, of Arizona, Mrs. Roosevelt's lifelong friend, listened to their arguments, apparently undecided how to vote. Her name was called. She voted for the rule.

Paraguayans Claim Bolivians in Retreat

Asuncion, Paraguay, June 1 (AP).—Claims of a victory in the Chaco jungle war, in which 15 miles of Bolivian defense works were captured and 150 of the enemy soldiers killed, were made today by the Paraguayan ministry of defense.

The official communique said that the Third Bolivian Division was forced to retreat. The advancing Paraguayans, it added, are consolidating their position in the "Canada Strongest" sector.

Reports that Capt. Chero, Bolivian air hero, had been killed were published in newspapers here today, but lacked official confirmation.

League Plans Study Of Warfare in Chaco

Geneva, June 1 (AP).—An examination of the Chaco jungle warfare between Bolivia and Paraguay will be made by the League of Nations council. It was decided today, followed by recommendations for a settlement of the dispute.

The action will be taken under article 15 of the League convenant as the result of an appeal by Bolivia, which was agreed to by the Paraguayan delegate.

Time will be granted both nations to make a statement, and it was indicated that this will delay any application of the proposed arms embargo against both.

"We were living in a fast age, and everyone was trying to get rich fast," Anadale recalled yesterday. "But I didn't get a nickel of that money. I was just foolish enough to keep quiet, when I might have spoken and cleared myself.

"I trusted my employer and my friends, and they let me down."

Anadale said his wife and children had obtained a separation, following his imprisonment.

"You can't blame her for feeling as she did, so that's all over," he said, with a twisted smile.

The parole board found mitigating circumstances in reviewing Anadale's case.

"Chief among these," its opinion stated, "is the fact that the applicant was at all times dominated by G. Bryan Pitts, who has been held responsible for the wrecking of the F. H. Smith Co.

"Pitts surrounded himself by a number of young men whom he dazzled by his financial success.

Rheem's Plea Denied.

In denying Rheem's application for parole, the board stated it was not satisfied the former real estate broker had been entirely frank in the statements made in his petition. The board pointed out that Rheem misrepresented or concealed important facts in connection with a first trust of $2,250,000 on the Shoreham Building, which the broker had promised to pay off.

Rheem's term will end July 9, 1938, but his sentence may be reduced by nearly two years by good behavior. He also may make another application for parole next year.

Anadale's term was to run until December 23, 1939, and for the duration of that time he is barred from selling securities or evidence of indebtedness of any description, from acting as trustee, having possession or the custody of moneys, securities or properties of any other person and from acting as an officer of any firm engaged in these forms of business.

"That's quite all right with me," Anadale said yesterday afternoon. "I never want to see another security.

"I have one or two prospects for work here in Washington. I'd like to stay right here and prove to people that while I was stupid to trust Pitts, I never took a nickel for myself."

Lawyer Obtains $2,500 Decision

Mrs. Evalyn McLean Told to Pay Attorney.

Mrs. Evelyn Walsh McLean, wife of Edward B. McLean, will have to pay Albert W. Fox, formerly employed by her as an attorney, $2,500 for legal services plus an unpaid balance of $500 on a promissory note, a jury in Chief Justice A. A. Wheat's court in the District Supreme Court decided yesterday.

Fox sued Mrs. McLean for $22,700, claiming he had not been paid for extensive legal services over a period of 16 months. He admitted receiving $12,500.

Fox testified that he had represented Mrs. McLean in divorce proceedings by which she secured a maintenance award and had acted as an adviser and intermediary in the Means case. In the latter, Mrs. McLean paid Gaston B. Means $104,000 with which he was to have obtained return of the Lindbergh baby.

Victim of Crash To Get $20,000

Because of injuries he received when a Standard Oil Co. truck struck the automobile in which he was a passenger, Percy E. Vernon, 1253 Sixth street southwest, yesterday was awarded a verdict for $20,000 by a jury in the District Supreme Court.

Vernon, a passenger in an automobile driven by Ethel L. Pumphrey, suffered a broken hip, which ultimately resulted in the shortening of a leg. He also suffered internal injuries.

Testimony showed that the truck crashed into the automobile at Sixth street and Maryland avenue southwest, February 27, 1933. Attorneys Michael J. Colbert and Harold Hawken filed suit asking for $50,000.

House Is Told Of Insull Phone Firm Collapse

Report Is Submitted on Eve of Action on Rayburn Bill.

(Associated Press.)

The collapse of the Associated Telephone Investment Co.—a $50,000,000 Insull interest—because of its attempts to sustain the market price of its securities was described yesterday in a report to the House.

The document was submitted on the eve of House plans to consider the Rayburn bill to create a commission of seven to regulate the communications industry. Privileged status was given the Administration measure by the Rules Committee yesterday and favorable House action is expected today.

A similar measure, embodying legislation to prevent practices described in the report made by Dr. W. M. W. Splawn, a member of the Initerstate Commerce Commission, to the House Commerce Committee, already has passed the Senate. The report said:

"The policy of the Associated Telephone Utilities Co. of attempting to support (through the use of a subsidiary) the market prices of its own securities resulted in impairment of its cash position to such an extent that such impairment was one of the major contributing causes to the appointment of receivers for the company on April 1, 1933."

The report is the second of three in a study of communication systems ordered by the House two years ago. It said the Associated Telephone Investment Co., a Delaware corporation, was organized to deal in "scrip (dividends) of the Associated Telephone Utilities Co. for the benefit of stock holders" but that from 1930 to 1932, it incurred a ne tloss of $5,500,000.

As officers and directors of the New York company, the report listed Martin J. Insull, brother to Samuel Insull; Marshall E. Sampsell, Leroy J. Clark, J. F. O'Connell and S. L. Odegard.

The company operated in 25 States and controlled or owned 42 operating companies eight holding companies and one telephone directory corporation.

The report said it wrote up valuations of its subsidiaries. Its consolidated book value of subsidiaries was described as $24,440,814 higher than the combined book values of the subsidiaries' properties.

Cooper Explains Vote.

Representative John G. Cooper, of Ohio, the other Republican conferee, said he would vote against it because of failure to eliminate some of the objectionable features. In the consideration of the bill before its original passage by the House Mr. Cooper unsuccessfully sought to moderate the penalty provisions.

Representative Hamilton Fish (Republican), New York, said that while he voted against the bill before, he would approve the conference report because of improvements made in conference. He vainly sought to obtain a roll call, so that a number of Republican memebrs who were recorded in the negative before, could go on record for the bill.

After the conference report had been approved in the Senate Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, one of the Senate conferees, made a defense of the securities act amendments in the bill.

Hastings Scores Bill.

"I think it is a fair statement that the civil liabilities sections are so amended that no honest man who is an officer or director of a corporation need have any fear of the law, so long as he gives the same reasonable care that he gives to his own business," said Senator Byrnes. "Every provision of the amendments to the securities act of 1933 liberalizes the present law."

"I am very much opposed to it, because while I think it does very many things and will cure many evils that ought to be cured, in the net result it will do more harm than it will good," Senator Hastings said. "But at the same time I want to say that whether that is true or not will depend very largely upon the administration of this law."

He protested against the failure of the conferees to approve an amendment submitted by him and adopted by the Senate, which would have exempted from the securities act issues of securities offered to employes of a corporation.

Insull Case Brought In.

Senator James Couzens (Republican), Michigan, interrupted to explain that one of the controlling factors, which caused the elimination of the amendment, was the Insull transactions.

Senator Fletcher said that he had approved the Hastings amendment and thought it was proper, but that the House conferees insisted that there was no reason for it and that, inasmuch as an offering of securities to employes was not a public offering, the securities act did not apply to it.

Senator Steiwer objected because the conferees had so phrased a paragraph in the corporate reporting section as to make it possible to require carriers subject to the interstate commerce act to file reports in addition to those required by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Senate authorized continuance of its stock market investigation into the next session, but leaders said this was only a formality, with no new inquiries planned.

Blamed for Collapse.

Yesterday's action ended a long struggle by President Roosevelt and Congress to protect investors and to curb excessive speculation, which many economists blame for the stock market collapse of 1929 and its contribution to the depression.

The act does not bar a reasonable amount of speculation in securities. The bill does carry margin provisions whmich will go far toward keeping the bootblack, the barber, the tie salesman and other Get-Rich-Quick Wallingfords out of the market.

The bill creates a commission of five, appointed by the President and subject to confirmation by the Senate, to administer the new law.

Landis Seen As Arbiter.

James M. Landis, the youthful steersman of the Federal Trade Commission, whose hand was influential in the shaping of the legislation, is expected by many to be appointed to the new securities commission, despite the probability of opposition to his confirmation in the Senate.

On margins, the bill sets up the "standard" that the purchaser of securities should pay at least 45 per cent cash. This is subject to change by the commission. The Federal Reserve Board is given direct control over brokers loans.

To prevent abuses resulting from officers and directors of a firm trading in their own stock, the act requires officials and stockholders holding more than 10 per cent of the stock in their corporation to report regularly any changes in their holdings.

Damage Can Be Asked.

Damage suits may be filed against such officials whose stock manipulations brought losses to other stockholders.

The Securities Act of 1933 is changed to relax liability placed on issuers of new stocks and bonds.

Adoption of the conference report brought new laurels to Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), Virginia, vigorous critic of many "new deal" policies and once referred to by President Roosevelt as an "unreconstructed rebel."

Glass fought throughout for the creation of a new securities commission, instead of placing this authority in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission, as was favored by the House and by the President.

Even after he was passed over by Chairman Duncan U. Fletcher (Democrat), Florida, of the banking committee in naming conferees on the bill, Glass' influence penetrated the closed doors and the President yielded.

District PWA Bill Passage Aided in House

Chances for House passage of the bill were considerably strengthened District PWA loan authorization yesterday when that chamber adopted its special rule to break up the Republican filibuster.

The District bill, which was scheduled to be voted on las Tuesday, and which has since been held up by precedence of National legislation and the filibuster, probably will not be presented to the House before Tuesday, Representative Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, said yesterday.

Limit Looms in Debate.

Under the rules adopted by the House yesterday, Smith may offset threatened opposition to the bill by Representatives Blanton (Democrat), Texas, and Cannon (Democrat), Missouri, by bringing the measure up under suspension of the rules with debate limited to 40 minutes.

The bill now carries a special rule limiting debate to an hour, but under the former procedure opponents of the bill could delay action by parliamentary tactics prior to adoption of the rule reported by the Rules Committee.

While the authorization in the bill has been reduced by the Rules Committee, from $20,000,000 to $10,750,000, Senator King (Democrat), Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee, stated yesterday that he would insist on a compromise addition of $5,000,000 for the Municipal Center if the bill passes the House in its present form.

Move Seen as Concession.

King said that he considered an addition of $5,000,000 would constitute a concession by both the Senate and the House, as the Senate passed the bill granting the District Commissioners the right to borrow as much as $20,000,000 from the Public Works Administration.

He explained that the lawyers of Washington are especially desirous of having the Municipal Center included in the authorization list because of the present congested conditions in the District courts.

"Besides," he said, "it was the Federal Government insisted that the District Government draft plans for a more lavish building than had been planed by the District, so that it migh harmonize with the Federal building program."

An amendment to include the Municipal Center in the House bill doubtless will be offered from the floor, but stands little chance of adoption in view of the attitude of the House toward District legislation.

Roosevelts See Son John Get Diploma

President Ignors Rumor of Train Bombing on Way to Groton.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Groton, Mass., June 1.—Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, of Hyde Park, N. Y., came up from his winter home at Washington today to see his youngest son graduated.

Entirely in that character, the President relived his own boyhood at the ultra-exclusive Episcopal Preparatory School of Groton, again under the wing of the Rev. Dr. Endicott Peabody, who was headmaster when he, too, was graduated 34 years ago.

For Groton fails to get excited about a visit by the President of the United States and only members of the family and Secret Service men were permitted entrance at its grilled iron gates. The rest of the President's entourage was stopped right there.

Son, John, Gets Diploma.

Memories of his own youth doubtless flooding through his mind, Mr. Roosevelt sat with several hundred other fathers, mothers and grandparents while diplomas were distributed in the school chapel to 32 graduates—among them John Aspinwall Roosevelt, the last of his four sons.

He heard Dr. Peabody conduct again the closing exercises. He heard an address to the graduating class by Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, president-emeritus of Harvard University. He heard Bishop William Lawrence make a speech as chairman of the board of trustees.

Then he lingered for a luncheon on the school grounds, seated in the center of a group of old acquaintes, all of them "Grotties," too. It was only as a "Grottie" that the President was received by his old headmaster, and the usual program was not altered a jot by his presence.

Bombing Is Rumored.

Thirty years ago President Theodore Roosevelt visited Groton to see his son, T. R., jr., graduated, and Roosevelts have been going to Groton even before and ever since. Applications generally are made at birth, and, according to reports, while most fathers merely write reserving a place, Groton men think it best to wire the Rev. Dr. Peabody of the event.

John Roosevelt, 6 feet 3, and a well-liked student, managed not to win any of the prizes this year, but his cousin, Joseph Willard Roosevelt, son of T. R., jr., did get an award for a music essay. Another Roosevelt, Kermit, jr., was in the graduating class.

Blissfully ignoring affairs of office, politics and even a wild rumor that an attempt was to have been made to bomb his train, the President motored here from Worcester this morning. Accompanying him were Mrs. Roosevelt; his mother, Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt; his daughter, Mrs. Anna Dall, and his son, James, and Mrs. James Roosevelt.

Talks With Gov. Ely.

Before leaving the train the President was called on by Gov. Ely, of Massachusetts, staunch supporter of Alfred E. Smith at Chicago, which revived speculation over the political situation in the State. If Ely runs again this fall, it will be against Mayor James M. Curley, of Boston, a Roosevelt man who has announced his candidacy.

The report of a bombing plot, which brought forth excited editions of Massachusetts newspapers, was traced down to a telephone call to a Boston railroad official by an unidentified man who was obviously intoxicated, it was said. Only usual precautions were taken at the train, which will remain in a siding at Worcester until tomorrow.

Returning to the train late today, the President took John along with him on the back seat of his open car. All along the 40 miles to and from Groton occasional crowds cheered as the President sped through quiet New England villages.

Again tomorrow he will motor to Groton to take part in exercises commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of its founding. The President will speak at an alumni dinner, after which he will entrain again for Hyde Park and his Hudson Valley home. There he will spend Sunday, returning to Washington early Monday.

Debtor Nations Told to Pay Up By Roosevelt

In conclusion, the President summed up the American argument for payment of the debts.

Main Points of Message.

He stressed:

1. The money loaned furnished vital means for the successful conclusion of a war which involves the national existence of the borrowers, and later for a quicker restoration of their normal life after the war ended.
2. The money loaned was in turn borrowed by this Government from the American people and, in the absence of repayment by foreign governments, must be raised by taxation.
3. The American people have felt their debtors were called upon to make a determined effort to discharge these obligations and, while not expecting the impossible, do ask that substantial sacrifices be made.
4. The American people are swayed by the use made by debtors of their available resources—whether such resources are applied for recovery and for reasonable repayment, or for armaments and the like.
5. There is no relation, in the view of this Government, between war debts and reparations.
6. Each individual nation has full and free opportunity individually to discuss its problems with the United States, but general conferences are as heretofore, absolutely out.

Finland Pays on Dot.

The negotiated new debt settlement with Finland was not included in the message. There was a recognition of Finland as the "only foreign government which has met all payments on its indebtedness punctually and in full." Congressional leaders had advised the President against asking approval of this revision lest opponents fear it was to serve as a precedent for other and heavier debtors.

Reception on Capitol Hill was enthusiastic. Both Democratic and Republican leaders declared the message was a true expression of the American people's stand. Administration leaders reported they were thankful that no more legislation was to be added to their heavy schedule.

The message went to Congress in the usual manner, although the President himself was not in Washington.

Twelve Defaults Expected.

A fortnight from today 13 debtor nations owe $175,000,000. Observers doubt that anyone, except Finland, will pay a penny. They feel that since the message offers no new plan whereby payments might be made the debtors will probably stick to their argument that payment, and particularly the transfer of the payments, is impossible.

There is a possibility, however, that the President's renewed offer to discuss the problems of individual debtors individually may result in one or more approaches from across the Atlantic.

Optimism over the outcome of such conferences, if they occur, is not marked. It is felt the difference in view is too wide to permit ready bridging. War debts, these observers add, are as dead an issue today as they were before the President's message went up.

British Given Warning.

Meantime, Britain was told in effect that her storming over the debt policy would only make the American people more determined than ever to collect the amount due them.

Congressional leaders, according to the United Press, almost unanimously shared the view of Senate Republican Leader Charles McNary that "it ill behooves them to criticize the President's message, which I heartily indorse."

"We must expect some very loose statements such as 'blackmail' and 'Shylock,'" said Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho. "We have been accustomed to those things during the last 20 years.

"The real question, however, is that here is a debt. Either the European taxpayer or the American taxpayer must pay it. Under any fair circumstances, I believe an impartial judge would hold that the people who used the money should pay it back."

Couzens Calls It Just.

Senator James Couzens (Republican), Michigan, said:

"I never interpreted the Hoover moratorium as interfering in any way with the ability of the allies to collect debts due them. The President's message was just. He couldn't do anything else under the circumstances."

The Republican comment was considered especially noteworthy in view of the British charges that the Hoover moratorium of the last Republican Administration was the primary cause of the whole debt muddle.

In lauding the President's debt stand, Republicans and Democrats for once were practically united.

Public Backing Seen.

"The President's views on the subject as indicated in the message are, in my opinion, in accord with general public sentiment in this country," said Democratic Senate Leader Joseph T. Robinson.

"The President keeps clearly before the world the fact that the people of the United States were and are being taxed heavily in order to make this money available for the nations which owe it," added Senator Alben W. Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky.

Administration officials generally shared the Congressional views, especially on London's reaction, but declined to comment.

The State Department, directly concerned in the debt negotiations, took the position that it could not reply to any comment on a statement of the President. Now that the President has stated his policy, it was indicated, the debtors will be given some time to digest his statement before any new moves are made.

Housing Bill's Fate in Hands Of White House

(Associated Press.)

Congressional leaders yesterday reached the conclusion it would take direct and strong pressure from the White House to get the Administration housing bill through this session.

President Roosevelt wants the bill to stimulate building and home modernization passed, but whether he would be willing to rits consideration to delay early adpournment is another matter.

The housing program is one of the proposals Mr. Roosevelt will take up on return to the Capital. He may feel it is important enough to put his influence actively behind it, but even then it might take hard work to get it through in its present form.

The bill has made little progress during the last few days, although word has reached the Capitol Mr. Roosevelt is keenly interested in speedy action.

More Hearings in Prospect.

Supporters of the measure had hoped to see the House Banking Committee conclude hearings this week, but today Chairman Steagall (Democrat), Alabama, of the group said flatly:

"We will have to continue the hearings next week."

At the same time, the ranking Democrat on the committee, Goldsborough of Maryland, told Horace Russell, general counsel for the Home Loan Bank Board, who was testifying for the plan:

"You are an optimist if you think the committee is going to report this bill."

Steagall already had indicated he thought extensive revision would be necessary.

The situation was somewhat more encouraging in the Senate for those who regarded the housing plan as one of the best devised to stimulate lagging employment in the heavy goods industries.

Bulkley Sees Approval.

Although a meeting of the Senate banking sub-committee to take up the measure in Executive session was postponed until tomorrow, Chairman Bulkley (Democrat), Ohio, said he did not think "there is a doubt" that the proposal would be approved.

House leaders, however, recalled it took a lot of pressure and time to get the bank deposit guarantee bill out of the House Banking Committee. They felt nothing less than the personal intervention of Mr. Roosevelt would bring the bill to the House floor.

"You call this bill a housing bill," Goldsborough said to Russell yesterday. "That's not a proper name for it, and that not being a proper name is evidence there is something wrong with it.

"That's the reason you won't find a member of this committee who has complete confidence in this legislation."

Deflation Is Seen.

The Marylander also commented that there were members of the committee who thought the bill "purely deflationary."

The bill has four principal sections—the guarantee of 20 per cent of loans to repair and remodernize homes, insurance of new and existing mortgages, establishment of National mortgage associations and the guarantee of deposits up to $2,500 in building and loan and similar institutions.

Most of the opposition has centered upon the insurance features and the section for the establishment of mortgage associations, building and loan groups asserting these would drive them out of business.

Bang's Property Valued at $3,300

An estate valued at $3,300 was left by Ralph H. Bangs, real estate operator, who, with two other men, was killed on May 10, when an airplane in which they were flying fell onto Chesapeake Beach, it was shown yesterday in a petition asking that H. Clifford Bangs, a brother, be appointed administrator.

His widow, Myrtle P. Bangs; his mother, Mrs. Fannie J. Bangs, and another brother, John E. Bangs, joined in filing the petition. The estate consists of a $300 bank deposit, $500 in notes receivable, and a cottage valued at $2,500 at Epping Forest, Md.

the front porch, where Mary minded little Marlene.

"Let me take Marlene," he said. "Her uncle, Leon Lebowitz, wants to see her."

"Why?" asked Mary. "I don't know you. I never saw you before, and I don't believe Marlene has an Uncle Leon Lebowitz. Anyhow, I haven't had orders from Mr. or Mrs. Lebowitz to let any one have Marlene."

Marlene has no Uncle Leon Lebowitz. Her Uncle Leon is Leon Bondareff, husband of Mrs. Lebowitz's sister.

When Mary refused to hand over the child, the stranger struck her on the chest. She fled into the house with Marlene, slamming the door in the intruder's face. He ran down the steps, leaped into the automobile, and vanished with his confederate.

Mother Shopping at Time.

Mrs. Lebowitz was shopping at the time of the attempted kidnaping. When Lebowitz was notified, he called Leon Bondareff, who said he had not sent for Marlene.

"I've got a beautiful baby," said Lebowitz, whose offices are in the National Press Building, "but no money. I don't believe I have any enemies."

"I grabbed Marlene and said I wouldn't give her to him—so what? He hauled off and hit me," commented Mary.

Kidnap Threat Suspect Held

Typewriter and Microscope Aid Police Search for Evidence.

Los Angeles, June 1 (AP).—A typewriter and a microscope led to the arrest of Frank E. Sutton, 53, former Tecumseh, Mich., mining man, on a Federal indictment charging him with sending a $22,000 extortion and kidnap threat letter more than a year ago to Fred S. Markham, his wealthy neighbor in Altadena, near here.

Sutton was arrested in Glendale last night as a result of a long inquiry by Federal agents and detectives employed by Markham, son of a former president of the Illinois Central Railroad. His bond was raised today from $5,000 to $25,000 and his arraignment set for next Monday.

Sutton denied the accusation.

The letter, mailed in Pasadena, March 31, 1933, demanded that Markham leave $22,000 in the hedge on his grounds, "or you or your children will be seriously injured."

Authorities said Sutton was a former army officer and came to southern California from Michigan in 1932.

Traffic Deaths In May Advance

Ten Persons Were Killed in District Mishaps in Month.

Ten persons met death in traffic accidents last month, according to Traffic Bureau figures. That was four more persons than were killed in May, 1933. In May, 1933, there were 751 accidents, as compared with 697 last month.

Although the death rate is higher than that of last year, it reveals a decline as compared with other months this year. The month registered the highest number of accidents.

In January, 14 persons were killed; February, 8; March, 12, and April, 13. January had 638 accidents, February, 515; March, 569, and April, 635.

This May also led in the total of injured persons, 385. This was 82 more than were hurt in May, 1933.

Bomb Plotter Faces Asylum

Mechanic Who Planned Dynamite Suicide is in Hospital.

Alameda, Calif., June 1 (AP).—Insanity proceedings, instead of a promised job and $2,000, were instituted today against Frank Bennett, unemployed mechanic who for nearly 24 hours sat on a load of dynamite and contemplated blowing himself to pieces.

The insanity warrant was sworn out by Police Inspector Al Sturzinger, one of the officers who finally persuaded Bennett to abandon his mad scheme yesterday. Bennett was taken to a psychopathic ward for examination.

The proceedings followed a report by Dr. O. D. Hamlin, county physician, that a "cycle of mental depression" was responsible for Bennett's plot.

The mechanic is to be examined by two alienists and is to be given a hearing next Tuesday.

Still bearing in mind the police promise of a job and additional cash relief, Bennett protested that he wasn't "nutty."

London Terms Debt Message As "Blackmail"

Cabinet Decides Not to Pay Anything at All Next Time.

Roosevelt's war debt policy was endangering European civilization because payment would result in a new economic crash, whereas default would discredit the capitalist system and enable the Soviet leaders to "come out on top."

France's Policy Firm; Had Expected Message

Paris, June 1 (AP).—President Roosevelt's debt message was interpreted by government officials today as leaving the French default policy unchanged. The message was looked upon as confirmation of the French contention that nothing has happened to change their stand.

Such a message was expected, it was said, as it was not anticipated the President would ask Congress to express itself before the November elections.

Debts Are Dead Issue, Say Geneva Delegates

Court Salaries Slashed 53%; Fund Gives Out

Justices and Others Wait on Deficiency Bill in Congress.

Justices of the District Supreme Court, their secretaries, and the employes of the assignment commissioner's office of the court are being paid approximately 47 per cent of their regular salaries because of exhaustion of funds from which they are paid, it became known yesterday with the issuance of pay checks for the last half of May.

Unless Congress takes immediate action on a deficiency bill now pending in the House of Representatives the checks up to the end of the fiscal year—July 1—will be no larger, it was said. The measure is expected to provide for reimbursement of the deductions.

The last checks were drawn on funds of the Department of the Interior, payable on that department's account at the Treasury. There is a special "earmarked" appropriation for the justices and their secretaries, which is normally controlled by the Department of Justice, although the salaries are charged against the municipal government.

Altogether, 24 employes are affected by the depletion of the fund. There are nine justices, each of whom receives $10,000 annually. Each has a secretary with a basic salary of $2,800. Assignment Commissioner Fred O'Connell and his two assistants are others who have been financially "short rationed."

Veterans' Commissioner William R. Harr, whose duties consist of aiding in the preparation of veterans' claims in the District Supreme Court, has also been placed on the list because his duties run somewhat along the lines of the assignment commissioner's office.

Questions as to how the annual appropriation for the District Supreme Court become depleted a month and a half before the end of the fiscal year elicited the information that the budget for the court was slashed in the House of Representatives.

In a test case recently decided by the United States Supreme Court, it was held that the justices of the District Supreme Court were "Constitutional judges," in that provision was made for them in the Constitution. The decision held that for that reason the 15 per cent pay cut decreed for all Government employes did not apply to them, and they were paid the amounts deducted.

Under that ruling, Congress can not cut the pay of a District Supreme Court justice during his lifetime. It also upheld the practice of retiring the judges with full pay.

Worker Finds Man Who Died In Plane Leap

Richmond, June 1 (AP).—The broken body of Alexander M. Luke, 29-year-old airport owner of Charleston, S. C., was on its way to Tarrytown, N. Y., by train tonight. Services are to be held there tomorrow. Luke died yesterday in a 4,000-foot suicide dive from a speeding plane as Beverley Howard, pilot, circled down after him, horror-struck.

For minutes preceding the leap Howard had clutched at Luke, vainly attempting to dissuade him from suicide. The man teetered on the wing of the plane. Then, overpowered by Luke's greater strength, Howard's hand lost its grip.

"I'll be seeing you some time," Luke yelled as he twisted free and pitched into space.

He plummeted 4,000 feet into a jungle-like thicket at Sailors Tavern, on the banks of the James River, near Richmond.

There his body was found today by E. F. McMillan, one of 50 Civilian Conservation Corps men who were pressed into service for a search which began yesterday afternoon.

Luke's back was crushed and his clothing had been torn to ribbons by the trees he had ripped through. One shoe had been torn off and thrown yards away.

Harold M. Ratcliffe, acting coroner and Commonwealth's attorney of Henrico County, declared no inquest would be held and that Howard was free to leave the jurisdiction whenever he was ready. Ratcliffe termed the death a clear case of suicide.

Howard and Luke were returning to Charleston, S. C., from Washington when Luke killed himself. The plane had just taken off from Byrd airport here.

Workers Plan Vote on Strike

Danville, Va., June 1 (Spl.).—Textile workers of Danville are expected to register their attitude toward joining the National strike called for next Monday at a meeting of all workers in the Owl's Hall here tomorrow.

Danville, meanwhile, appeared placid under the threat of the second textile strike in four years. In 1930, the workers of the Dan River Mills walked out and remained from their jobs for four months only to lose their fight.

At tomorrow's meeting, the textile workers will probably be addressed by an official of the United Textile Workers from New York, accompanied by C. W. Bolick, organizer, who was active here during the 1930 walkout.

Monday will witness the inauguration of new time schedules in the local textile plants, whereby during the next 12 weeks weavers, frame operatives, carders and spinners will earn one-fourth less due to a cut in their working time.

Court to Oust Store Tax Suit

U. S. Bench Held Lacking Jurisdiction Over Virginia Case.

Fredericksburg, Va., June 1 (Spl.).—Dismissal of the suit of the Sanitary Grocery Co. against the City of Fredericksburg from the United States District Court in Richmond probably will be ordered soon because of lack of jurisdiction, C. O'Conor Goolrick, city attorney, announced today.

The chain store tax case was argued before Judge Luther B. Way on May 3, who then expressed doubt as to the jurisdiction of his court, as the amount involved was less than $3,000.

The grocery company is now expected to institute another suit in the Corporation Court of this city. If the validity of the ordinance is upheld in Judge Frederick W. Coleman's court, the case may eventually go to the Supreme Court of Virginia and the Supreme Court of the United States.

To bring suit in the local court the grocery company must pay a tax amounting to $1,000 for 1933 and 1934, payment to be made under protest and subject to recovery in suit here.

During May of last year, 229 prisoners began serving sentences in the penitentiary. In May of this year, the total number was only 110, Maj. Youwell stated.

The decrease in commitments in May, as compared with the same period last year, was largely because economic conditions throughout the country have improved, with the resultant decrease in unemployment, Maj. Youell said.

Rainey Orders Press Censor Rule in House

Rep. Cannon's Protest on Release of Speech Is Cause.

Representative Cannon (Democrat), Missouri, chairman of the House District appropriations committee, yesterday obtained a press censorship rule invoked by Speaker Rainey.

Cannon, who many times has complained of the treatment accorded him by the press of Washington and of Missouri, arose in the House yesterday to complain against the release of a transcript of his harangue against his colleague, Representative Cochran (Democrat), to newspapermen.

Complaining that he had not had time to revise his remarks before they were released, Cannon asked the Speaker if such a practice on the part of the House reporters was proper and in accordance with House rules. Rainey replied:

"The chair is advised that Mr. Speaker Longworth advised the reporters that they could submit to the press copies of the remarks of the members of Congress before these remarks appeared in the Record and even without the consent of a member making the remarks.

"The practice has been since that time to follow the method. The chair thinks it improper and the gentleman from Missouri (Cannon) has just given an excellent reason why this is improper. The chair now instructs the reporters hereafter not to submit to the press the remarks of members of Congress in advance of their appearing in the Record unless the consent of the member making the remarks is first obtained."

The ruling immediately created a furore in the press gallery and raised many practical difficulties in them inds of the newspaper men.

It is a recognized practice of members of Congress to tone down sensational remarks, particularly in acrimonous debate, in revising their talks before publication in the Congressional Record. Consequently, newspaper men may find that though they take down a member's very words, these words will be deleted beforethey appear in the Record.

BAKER.

AGRICULTURE employes are alert to take advantage of their new auditorium, which will be formally opened soon. Anticipating the general use of the assembly room after June 1, Dr. W. W. Stockberger, director of Personnel and Business Administration for the department, with the cooperation of Archie C. Edwards (*), BAE, have begun the organization of dramatic, choral and orchestral groups. Mr. Edwards is president of the Agriculture branch of Local No. 2, National Federation of Federal Employes.

Approximately 135 already have signed pledges to enter on the project, displaying a wide range of talent. Forty wish to join in the choral groups, 50 in dramatics and 45 in the orchestra. Mr. Edwards is receiving more applications daily. It is the plan to select from this number a glee club, several quartets, an orchestra and dramatic and floorshow talent.

The facilities of the department are to be used entirely and the work is to be centered there. This movement is held to be an example of the splendid espirit de corps in the Department of Agriculture.

Of those signed up so far, the following appear likely to provide the leading talent:

Ralph Erskine, BAI, assisted by Mr. Braithwaite and Freund, AAA, choral groups (Mr. Freund already has organized a group of singers known as "Gypsy Singers," and Mr. Braithwaite directs the choir at the National City Christian Church); John L. Stewart, BAE, dramatics; together with Frederick L. Compton, AAA; F. W. Harvey, AAA, and Fred Wilkins, Office of Motion Pictures, orchestra work.

Plans are complete at Finance Division, War, for the employes' annual sail down the Potomac on the City of Washington Monday night. Miss E. Washburn is in charge of arrangements, being assisted by Capt. A. C. Harden, Lieut. H. A. Gardyne and Miss M. Blanchard.

DISMISSED Postal employes in New York are seeking to affiliate with the Civil Service Reinstatement League and establish a branch in New York, according to letters being received by league officers. Meanwhile the league is striving to block the proposed dismissal of 175 District Emergency Relief workers, a resolution of objection having been adopted at its last meeting.

A large committee of the league is working for the passage of the Celler bill (for repeal of the marriage clause in the economy act) and is cooperating with the Government Workers Council of the Woman's Party in urging favorable action on the bill.

All employed and dismissed Government people are urged to attend the next meeting of the league on Tuesday night at the Thomson School, Twelfth and L streets northwest.

Agriculture-Commerce Dance.

Tonight the Agriculture and Commerce branches of Local No. 2, National Federation of Federal Employes, will be hosts at an "All Agriculture and Commerce Dance" at the Kennedy-Warren, beginning at 9:30 o'clock. Archie C. Edwards, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, chairman of arrangements, announces George Gaul's Orchestra will play and there will be refreshments and bridge.

Plenty of parking space, a novelty for Federal employes, Mr. Edwards points out, is available.

Fleet Greeted By LaGuardia As Guns Boom

Mayor Visits Flagship Then Officers Call at City Hall.

New York, June 1 (AP).—Saluting guns continued to boom about New York today and band after band played "The Star-Spangled Banner" as the official city in top hats welcomed the United States fleet.

Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia and his cabinet, going out in a gay-decked barge, were received aboard the flagship Pennsylvania by Admiral David R. Sellers, commander in chief of the fleet.

"Welcome!" said La Guardia, after the bugles had sounded and flurries had been beaten on drums. "New York belongs to you."

Then the New Yorkers rushed back to city hall, where half an hour later the high command of the Navy returned the official visit.

While the admirals in their gold-braided uniforms were making this call, 25,000 of the 33,000 seamen in the fleet were given shore leave and the battleships were opened to the New York public. The bluejackets came into the city with $1,000,000 in their pockets.

Postmen boarded the ships, lying in the Hudson, to deliver 100,000 letters accumulating for members of the fleet at the postoffice for four weeks. One letter came addressed, "To the tall blond sailor on the U. S. S. Pennsylvania."

The Mayor gave an official dinner tonight at the Commodore for the 3,500 officers aboard the ships. Later officers and their wives were guests at a dance in the Waldorf. Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, was honorary chairman.

Rice, Miss Kurz and Brown all were beaten. The attacker apparently gave no warning. There was, however, no robbery in the "Lovers' Lane" attack.

Washington police were reluctant to discuss the Fredericksburg case yesterday.

Wants Interview.

"I want to talk to this boy, and then I'll find out something," asserted Inspector F. S. W. Burke, chief of detectives. "All I want to do is get him and talk to him."

Department of Justice agents are interested in Mize from the Fredericksburg angle because the murder of Miss Kurz occurred on Government property—the Battlefield Memorial.

In Fredericksburg, Brown's conversation was garbled. Occasionally he recognizes people with whom he talks.

"He is temporarily deranged," physicians told authorities. "He has, however, an even chance to recover."

Republican Filibuster Fails As Tariff Bill Vote Nears

mittee, in getting an agreement to end the debate at 5 p. m. Monday.

This was not the first time that McNary has turned his back on movements originating in the Old Guard Republican bloc. Several weeks ago, when this group proposed to move to recommit the stock market control bill to the Banking and Currency Committee to permit hearings on amendments to the 1933 securities act, McNary frowned on the plan and publicly announced he would vote for the bill on the final passage. His action forced his party colleagues to abandon their plan.

After the Senate had spent two weeks and two days in debating the tariff bill, with the Republicans holding the floor most of that time—several of them speaking three and four times—Robinson and Harrison yesterday announced they had temporized with dilatory tactics long enough.

Notice Served.

They gave notice they would keep the Senate in session until at least 11 o'clock last night and, if the bill were not adopted, would force a session starting early today and continuing until the measure was disposed of.

McNary off the floor conceded that members on his side of the chamber were engaging in a filibuster, but said they were doing so against his wishes. He later conferred with Robinson and Harrison and urged that an agreement for a definite hour at which to vote be arranged in lieu of the prolonged sessions last night and today.

Harrison about 6 p. m. proposed, with the explanation that unless his plan were accepted the night session would be held, that the Senate adjourn until 10 a. m. today that at noon a vote be taken on the Johnson and all other amendments relating to farm products, which have been under debate since Wednesday, and that thereafter all speeches be limited to five minutes, with a final vote at 4 p. m.

McNary Objected.

McNary objected before any one on his side could get to their feet, and suggested an alternative. His plan was that an adjournment be taken until 10 a. m. Monday, that the Johnson amendment be voted on at noon and that thereafter speeches be limited to 10 minutes with the final voting at 5 p. m. Harrison simulated some reluctance to accept that proposal, but finally agreed, and it was adopted.

Shortly before this agreement was reached there were reports from the Republican cloakroom that objection would be made to agreeing on an hour to vote until President Roosevelt made known what measures on the program would be pushed through before adjournment. But this determination faded in face of the stand taken by McNary.

The length of the debate on the tariff bill, however, has made impossible the passage of all the remaining "new deal" measures by June 9, the scheduled adjournment date set by President Roosevelt. After disposing of the tariff bill Monday the Senate will have only five days before June 9 to act on the silver bill, the Wagner labor disputes bill, the bill expanding licensing authority under the AAA, the so-called housing measure and the deficiency appropriation bill carrying funds for public works and relief of distress.

Up to President.

Unless the session goes beyond June 9, some of these measures will have to be abandoned. This situation will be laid before President Roosevelt when he returns to the White House Monday, and he will be asked which course he wishes pursued.

Meanwhile, Robinson used about 25 minutes of the day's seven hours' debate on the tariff bill to make a forceful and ringing defense of that measure. He held the delegation of power to the President proposed in the bill was "lawful by all the authority and precedents," that it was practical and justified by the condition of the country and that it was in line with the Democratic platform promising an approach to the tariff question through reciprocal agreements.

He contended the purpose of the bill was "to revive the falling commerce of the United States" and reminded those who "are making every possible effort to discredit this legislation that if the farmers of this country and the people generally are to be compelled to rely for a revival of commerce on the policies which the opponents of this legislation have put into force respecting the tariff, then we will go down, down, down, into a bottomless pit."

Disaster Threatened.

"Disaster is threatened, is imminent," he asserted.

Robinson cited the disparity in farm prices and indsutrial prices and the sharp decline in exports of agricultural products, adding that "yet Senators have the nerve to stand o nthe floor of the Senate and ask to perpetuate a system that has not only wrecked industry, but has threatened the destruction of agriculture."

"If you want the United States, its merchants and shippers to have a fair chance with those who compete with them in foreign trade," he said, "you must employ some practical means of negotiating and giving effect to these trade agreements and, if you require that all of them shall be brought here for ratification, the emergency will have passed, our commerce will have disappeared from the seas and the suffering of our people intensified by reason of our foolish policy.

"I feel that the history of our time, the conditions which surround us, the results which have been obtained by other nations which have increased their commerce by the exercise of power similar to that which we propose to confer on the Executive under this legislation—I feel that all these facts justify us in passing this measure."

Congress Race Ousts Lankford From U. S. Job

Former Georgia Member Asked to Resign Post in Revenue Bureau.

William Chester Lankford, former representative from the tobacco section of Georgia, yesterday was asked to resign his position as a member of the Internal Revenue Bureau's counsel staff because he aspires to again wear the toga of a Representative.

The request was made in an order signed by Commissioner Guy T. Helvering, and was said to be in line with the Administration's policy to terminate services of Government employes who have announced themselves as candidates for office.

Mr. Lankford will follow part of the trail blazed southward by former Gov. Theodore Bilbo, of Mississippi, who had to resign his post as chief newspaper clipper for the Agricultural Adjustment Administration at $6,500 a year, when he announced he would seek the Senatorial nomination in the coming Mississippi primary.

The Georgian, known from Rabun Gap to Tybee Light by his fellow citizens for having spent from 1919 to 1933 in the House of Representatives, said he plans to return home at once to take the stump against thei ncumbent, Braswell Deen, who defeated him two years ago.

Lankford said he had been too busy to bring to conclusion a long series of bank cases and had made no preparations for his campaign. Referring to Mr. Helvering's order, he said:

"It may be that there s something providential in this. Now that I am free, I will go back to my home at Douglas immediately and put on the best fight I can, and the voters down there are a common-sense lot of people who won't be fooled. They will know whether or not they want me in Congress, and I am not afraid of their decision."

Employes Close Desks Hour Early

New Summer Hours Put Into Practice.

Interior Department and Public Works Administration employes closed their desks and went home an hour before the usual 4:30 quitting time yesterday.

But they came to work—most of them—an hour earlier, in accordance with their agreement with Administrator Ickes.

The 8 a. m. starting time was accepted by popular vote after Ickes pointed out the advantages of evading traffic tie-ups and added leisure for summer evenings.

Senate Passes D. C. Alley Bill To Close Slums

began 70 years ago, after a smallpox epidemic raged through them. There have been intermittent crusades against them ever since.

11,000 Live in Them.

The alleys, hidden from the street as they are, flourish in every part of the old city, designed by L'Enfant. Some of them are only a few hundred yards away from the Capitol. Others are huddled near fashionable homes in the Dupont Circle district. It is estimated that they are inhabited by from 11,000 to 13,000 people.

Alley houses are crime breeders, where "fences" and others intent on illicit enterprise, congregate. Tuberculosis flourishes there and the germs nourished in these stifling hovels have multiplied in other parts of the city and helped to raise the Washington death rate to an unseemly total.

It was on alley beats that policemen first walked in pairs.

That such slums should exist in the Capital of the United States has always been a distressing fact to those who were aware of it. However, the very fact that the alleys were hidden has helped to perpetuate their existence.

The revelation of the alley problem by The Post, however, had the effect of bringing them out into the daylight, and victory followed.

Seaman Hopes to Cross Atlantic in Canoe

Peterborough, Ontario, June 1 (AP). A 24-year-old seaman, John Smith, announced today that he plans to cross the Atlantic Ocean in a canoe, starting in two weeks.

Smith, an able seaman on United States coastal vessels in Atlantic and Pacific waters for the last eight years, said he will sail from Peterborough, Ontario, to Peterborough, England, in a 16-foot craft loaded with 500 pounds of fresh water and hardtack.

Congress Votes Gangster Fund

U. S. Puts $25,000 Price on Criminal Heads.

Congress last night placed a price of $25,000 on the head of public enemies like John Dillinger.

The Senate completed action on a bill authorizing payment of that reward for apprehension of any criminals designated by the Attorney General to be public enemies.

The Senate also completed and sent to the White House another measure authorizing two or more States to enter into agreements to cooperate in prevention of crime.

These bills supplement numerous others passed this session, strengthening Federal authority for an offensive against the underworld.

January 14 Hiccoughs Stop.

Waiters Throw Things In House Restaurant.

The House restaurant put on a preliminary bout in the Capitol yesterday, but failed to take the spotlight away from the House floor.

A head waiter, Walter Roberts, and a waiter, R. Lawson, began throwing bottles, finger bowls and glasses at each other after Lawson, who had been dismissed for the day, demanded his pay.

Before the restaurant management could interfere, $1.30 worth of equipment had been broken. No arrests were made, but Peter Johnson, manager, said the damages would be taken out of the employes' pay.

Steel and Textile Crisis Grows; Johnson Urges Special Board

Tighe and a youthful element in his union led by the "rank and file" committee seemed ironed out. Earl J. Forbeck, committee chairman, reputed author of a fiery statement of Tuesday predicting "bloody warfare," departed for Pittsburgh on the same train with Tighe. Forbeck continued to demand action, while Tighe counseled mediation if possible.

White House Parley Possible.

The possibility that President Roosevelt would summon steel manufacturers here for a conference next week remained as a significant factor in the dispute.

Thomas McMahon, president of the United Textile Workers, charged the industry had been plunged back to pre-code conditions by lack of enforcement of the textile code. He complained employers were developing "a technique of violation" and reiterated wages were lower than before NRA intervention.

"The workers," he warned, "are just waiting for a chance to show their resentment and opposition to prevailing conditions. If the situation is allowed to continue, the Textile Institute will destroy the code."

Conversely, both Johnson and George Sloan, president of the institute, denied NRA permitted wage cuts and declared the code caused immense increase of employment in the industry. They agreed the 25 per cent production curtailment order which led to issuance of the strike order was necessitated by seasonal decreases in textile business.

Can Make No Prophecies.

Sloan said he could "make no phophecies" when asked to comment on prospects of a compromise.

Francis J. Gorman, union vice president, said workers were ready to strike in New England, Virginia, Tennessee, the Carolinas, Mississippi and Georgia.

Figuring in the workers' demands was the insistence that the "stretch-out" system must go. That practice involves increased production through use of more machines, although the augmented number of machines are operated by the same number of men.

Johnson argued he would "back up" the steel union if it could show outright refusal by any company to bargain collectively with representatives of the workers, as contemplated under Section 7-A of the NIRA.

"In order to charge and prove violation of Section 7-A," he explained, "a proper groundwork must be laid, showing freely chosen representation, tender of representation for bargaining, and refusal of such tender. That groundwork has not as yet been laid."

G. W. U. Opens Senior Week Fetes Tonight

Program Will Continue Until Commencement Exercises Wednesday.

Traditional ceremonies of senior week, preliminary to rituals of cap and gown, will begin at George Washington University tonight with the annual reception and ball in honor of the graduates.

The affair will be held at the Mayflower Hotel by the General Alumni Association, preceded by the association's annual meeting. Features of the ball will be the presentation of two new alumni awards to the man and woman of the graduating class whose loyalty "has been demonstrated in terms of outstanding service to the university."

A tap service will be held by the Steel Gauntlet Honorary Society, in which outstanding members of next year's graduating class will be pledged to the society's rolls. All graduates will wear red roses, the senior class insignia.

Tomorrow at 4 p. m. baccalaureate services will be held at All Souls' Church, with the Rev. Dr. Allen Stockdale, minister of the First Congregational Church, delivering the sermon. The Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, minister of All Souls' Church, will act as chaplain, and Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of the university, will read the lesson.

President and Mrs. Marvin will receive members of the graduating class and their parents at the Washington Club Monday afternoon. Class Night exercises will be held Tuesday evening in the university on the campus, with valedictory and salutatory addresses.

Climixing the week, commencement exercises will take place Wednesday night in Constitution Hall, when degrees will be conferred on graduates of the various schools, including the Junior College, Columbian College, the Graduate Council, School of Medicine, School of Engineering, School of Pharmacy, Schools of Education, School of Government, division of library science and the division of fine arts.

Liquor Bottles That Cheat Eye Face U. S. Ban

'Standards of Fill' to be Issued Soon; Trade in 'Empties' Tit.

The Government is putting its ban on "chiseling" liquor bottles that make 22 ounces look like a full 32-ounce quart.

Joseph H. Choate, Federal alcohol administrator, made the announcement yesterday. He said within a few days his administration would issue "standards of fill" for whiskies, gin, rum and brandies.

The new tsandards will cover imported liquors also, though Choate sai dthere were "very few difficulties in that field." They will not apply to wines, beer, cordials and other alcoholic drinks unless evidences of deception should materialize.

To Urge Cut in Tariff.

Choate, who recently urged a reduction in liquor tariffs, told newsmen he was prepared to make such a recommendation to President Roosevelt as soon as the reciprocal tariff bill becomes law.

"The present rate is $5 a proof gallon plus the $2 internal revenue tax, or $7," Choate said. "A 50 per cent cut in the tariff would leave the total tax at $4.50, as compared with $2.60 before prohibition."

Choate favored a tariff reduction particularly on "whisky, champagne and brandies — the bootleggers' stand-bys."

A widespread use of fake Canadian labels on bootleg liquor made in the United States was revealed to newsmen by Secretary Morgenthau. A special inquiry revealed that smuggling had so declined the Treasury had removed 50 border agents from the Detroit area.

Traffic Done in Empty Bottles.

"I'm fairly well satisfied it is not Canadian whisky but illicit liquor made in this country and sold under fake Canadian labels," Morgenthau said.

Choate said he understood there was a great deal of traffic in empty bottles of well-known brands. "The small bootleggers probably use second-hand bottles to a great extent," Choate said. "I understand there is a considerable demand for empties with undamaged labels.

"It has been suggested that bootleggers make arrangements for empties with big apartment houses, but we have no evidence of it. It is chiefly a job for State authorities."

Bolton Holds Pledge Broken By New Deal

Urges Voters to Take Administration to Task at Polls.

The Democratic Administration should be taken to task in the coming congressional campaign for having violated campaign pledges, Representative Chester C. Bolton, co-chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, said in a radio talk last night.

"The promise of a New Deal in the last campaign carried with it no implication whatever of the sweeping changes that were to follow so soon after the inauguration of the new Administration," he said. "Neither was the New Deal, as now developed, remotely implied in the last National Democratic platform. If words mean anything, quite the contrary."

As instances, Representative Bolton said the platform declaration for Government economy was utterly incompatible with the "rash extravagance" of the New Deal. He said the declaration for removal of Government from all fields of private enterprise was in conflict with the "partnership" between Government and industry now being undertaken in the recovery program.

"The New Deal seems to have brought with it a new code of political morals as well as the codes imposed upon business," he continued. "But broken platform pledges will be a proper topic for discussion in the coming campaign, and well they should be. I say again, there was no mandate in the 1932 election, decisive though it was, for so rash an adventure into a field purely experimental, at a cost so great, involving such potentialities for evil to the form and spirit of our institutions."

John Boles in A New Musical Seems Assured

Montgomery Signs for 3; That Sailor Vernacular; Theater Chat.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

By Nelson B. Bell.

Late dispatches from Hollywood bring glad tidings of two young men thought well of by Washington.

After many rumors hinting at some such eventuality, John Boles, a Capital favorite, by virtue of his several personal appearances here and his gracious demeanor on the occasion of each—John is the only star I know who will stand uncovered in a rainstorm and autograph everything from programs to lily cups for juvenile admirers—has been definitely assigned to a leading role in "Music in the Air."

In view of their successful costellar appearance in "My Lips Betray," it is highly probable that Lilian Harvey also will be added to the cast of this musical.

Out at Universal City, where the Laemmles, father and son, preside over the destinies of Universal Pictures, Douglass Montgomery, who acquitted himself well with Katharine Hepburn in "Little Women," has been given a three-picture contract as a reward for the excellence of his work opposite Margaret Sullavan in "Little Man, What Now?"

Best To Date.

Those who have previewed this Frank Borzage screen rendering of the Hans Fallada fiction, declare that Montgomery gives the finest performance in the role of titular implication ever brought to the screen by a young actor in his twenties.

Mr. Montgomery, by the way, has consistently declined long-term Hollywood contracts because he prefers to remain free to accept stage engagements when the spirit moves. In this instance, however, the Laemmles were sufficiently sagacious to clause their contract in such manner as to permit Montgomery wide latitude in where he plays and when.

Reverting to John Boles, it is a happy augury that at last the producers are abandoning their attempt to make a Lionel Barrymore of him and are permitting him opportunity to do those tuneful, romantic things in which he is at his best.

It will be recalled by the novitiate that when John entered pictures, 'way back there opposite Gloria Swanson in "The Loves of Sonya," the inaugural attraction at the old Roxy Theater, in New York, he was known only as a singer.

Bit of Daring.

It was looked upon quite as a bit of daring when Miss Swanson selected him to play opposite her in a part that was not even one of pseudo-operatic character.

Since then, for some unaccountable reason, John has been cast as decrepit old men, aging paterfamilias, middle-aged roues and what not.

His metier is distinctly light opera—or at least some gay, musical thing in which he may express in song, rather than the emotional stresses of intensive acting, the ebullience and spontaneity of youth.

It should not be made to count for nothing that Boles went through the arduous schooling of the Oscar Seagle and Jean de Reszke training courses to emerge one of the most promising of the stage's young vocalists. That voice won't last forever, ignored as it has been.

Through an inadvertent confusion of typed announcements, it was stated on this page yesterday that, beginning today, the attraction at Loew's Palace Theater would be supplied by Joan Crawford and Franchot Tone in Vina Delmar's "Sadie McKee." This, at best, was premature. Joan Crawford and Mr. Tone will come along a week from today. In the meantime, Clark Gable, Myrna Loy and William Powell will continue to occupy the Palace screen in "Manhattan Melodrama," a subject that has attracted such generous patronage as to make a second week inevitable.

Glossary of the Gobs.

With the United States fleet anchored in New York and "Sailor, Beware" about to drop anchor in the National Theater on next Monday night, Panjandrum Stephen E. Cochran of the National Theater Players deems it high time that a little of this nautical jargon with which the East is being sprayed be interpreted for the benefit of the landlubber.

Here, then, in comparatively plain and concise English is set down the meaning of some of the maritime vernacular in current use by the gobs:

War color—gray paint
Seagull—chicken
Jewish bacon—corned beef
Charlie Noble—smokestack
Foo-foo—talcum powder.
Beef boats—supply ships
Baloney wagons—destroyers and submarine tenders
Plank owner—member of the crew who has spent several years on one ship
Rubbersock—recruit
Ward 13—the morgue

How Come, Professor?

Now, where did a dignified and austere Columbia professor like Kenyon Nicholson ever pick up all this salt-water lingo? It seems the circumstances were something like this:

In one of his classes in journalism Professor Nicholson had a pupil by the name of Charles Robinson. Together they went to Hollywood to write scripts for the movies. In their spare time and over week-ends they hovered around the docks in San Pedro—which is by way of being a naval base—fraternizing with officers and enlisted men and in divers and sundry other ways, as the saying goes, sopping up atmosphere. They studied the shipboard habits of the sailors, absorbed their slang and, most important of all, observed their ways among women. Kodak pictures gave them their hunches, subsequently, for stage settings.

Called in Experts.

When "Sailor, Beware" was put into production, Playwright Nicholson was on hand to see to it that all he had learned in San Pedro was put to good account on the boards. Not trusting wholly to his own recollections, he enlisted the advisory counsel of four ensigns from the Brooklyn Navy Yard as practical, technical assistants.

As a result of all this cautious preparation, Admiral Yates Sterling, United States Navy, is among those who have attested to the technical authenticity of the "Sailor, Beware" production.

Manager Cochran is emphatic in his declaration that the National Theater Players' production of this salty comedy will be in every respect on a par with the New York original—which, of course, he can not secure, because "Sailor, Beware" is still packing them in on Broadway.

The following slight change in schedule of the Wilson Line's moonlight cruises will prove of interest to those who go down to the Potomac in ships.

This year the Wilson Line steamer City of Washington will stop at Marshall Hall Park on the moonlight trips, but only long enough to allow those who wish to go ashore to do so. The steamer will then continue on down the Potomac, returning to the park at 10:30 p. m. to pick up those left on the trip down. This new arrangement will give moonlight passengers a choice between spending an hour on the new amusements at Marshall Hall Park or going on down the river for a further 10-mile cruise.

This arrangement, it is believed, will best serve the tastes of both old and young who seek surcease from the heat on these pleasant river jaunts. The only possible drawback is that peculiar quirk in human nature by which no matter which you do—land or stay aboard—you probably will wish you had done the other!

"Local Boy Makes Good!"

Among the cast of "Rodney," which has its Washington premiere today at Warner's Metropolitan Theater, is Robert Shayne, a local boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dawe, of this city.

Mr. Shayne, who plays the role of Maj. Jim Parker in "Rodney," is a graduate of Central High School. While at Central he was prominent in school dramatics, making his biggest hit in "The Man From Home." Leaving school, he joined the Theater Guild of New York where he was discovered by Hollywood picture scouts. "Rodney" is his first motion picture.

Mr. and Mrs. Dawe will attend the Metropolitan Theater tonight to see their son on the screen for the first time.

Power of Example Note.

It just goes to show the pernicious influence of the movies! How many times, I mean, since the battle fleet drew into New York waters, have you seen the headline or picture caption, "The Fleet's In"?

Will Clara Bow please step up and take a bow?

Visible on Loew Screens Today

Coming to the screen at Loew's Fox Theater today is the widely discussed Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of "Viva" Villa," starring Wallace Beery. At left above, Mr. Beery is pictured in what is declared to be one of his greatest characterizations. On the right, Myrna Loy, who continues, with Clark Gable and William Powell, for a second week in "Manhattan Melodrama," at the Palace.

West Coast Foresees Eastern Raid for Stage Talent; Paramount's Financial Troubles Are Near End; a Little of This, That and the Other.

By Edwin Schallert.

Hollywood, May 31.—A raid on Hollywood for Eastern stage talent is in prospect. Heartened apparently by the fact that they were able to lure Helen Hayes, Walter Huston and others back to New York during the past season, the footlight show producers are contemplating digging deeper into the studio reservoir of talent. In some cases their ambitions run very high and will likely go quite unfulfilled.

BEBE DANIELS.

There is Lew Brown, for instance. Eastern reports credit him with the determination, if possible, to prevail on Jimmy Cagney to go into a new revue, in which he is planning to use Mary Brian. Brown is to come to the Coast to quest for personalities within the next week or so.

Then Ray Henderson and Jack MacGowan are talking about movie celebs for their production, "And So Are You." Bebe Daniels will probably be in that. And, additionally, the sky seems to be the limit, for one hears mention of Joan Blondell or Jean Harlow to lend brilliance to the cast, but it will probably be some chore to jar them loose from their moorings here.

The star of the production will, incidentally, be an erstwhile movie performer—he was in one movie anyway—Harry Richman.

"Depression" Lifts For Paramount.

Within one month now it is probable that a plan will be worked out which will alleviate any sense of "financial depression" in the Paramount organization. This significant statement was made to me yesterday by Adolph Zukor, who generals this large film institution. A plan is to be submitted by all interested parties, including the creditors' committees, first and foremost, which will seek to solve the economic problems of this, one of the oldest film concerns.

This plan will receive the consideration of the management and of the stockholders, and from the outlook will probably be adopted, carried through and relieve the organization of all handicaps to its development and progress.

Old-Timer Returns.

Now it is Madge Bellamy, former Fox star, who is returning to the pictures, and again with Fox. She signed a long-term contract yesterday. No story has yet been found for her.

Miss Bellamy began her career as a New York stage actress, her first role being the little girl in Barrie's "Dear Brutus." She came into pictures as a very young girl, with Thomas H. Ince and made a big hit, being one of the highest salaried actresses, at 17, in the business. Afterward she went with Fox, and drew so large a salary that she became rich. Then she married and was divorced in a few weeks. Financial reverses overtook her during the depression.

Picture Pageant Now Passing.

"Big Boy" Williams paid a flying visit to Tioga Lodge last week. Barbara Weeks, on location with the "She Was a Lady" company, was stopping there. At the time Frank Borzage and Williams were polo-ing up in Boise, Idaho, but distance meant nothing. He drove down all the miles to the Mono Lake country to see the lady fair. Love is love, you know.

Incidentally, cowboys in that locality had quite a time riding their jumping horses in English saddles. An oddity was that Indians were hired for the picture at the rate of three ice cream cones a day; that's all they seemed to want.

Doctor Urges Schools Spread Cancer Facts

Loudoun Health Group Is Told Ignorance of Disease Is Peril.

Leesburg, Va., June 1 (Spl.).—Declaring that cancer is not an incurable disease, Dr. M. B. Hiden, prominent Warrenton physician and chairman of the committee to control cancer in northern Virginia, told the Loudoun County Public Health Association yesterday that one thing worse than cancer is the fear of the disease.

He said that people should be educated to the fact that cancer can be cured if detected in time. He said he saw no better way to do this than through schools, and suggested pamphlets be circulated among pupils.

The Rev. J. A. Welbourn, chairman of the local chapter of the American Red Cross, reported a balance of $187.60 in the treasury and said that $877.40 had been spent from January 1 to the present.

Mrs. Blanche M. Melvin, local FERA director, reported 244 families being helped through the relief administration. She also stated that 125 people would be put to work on approved projects paid with provisions at the rate of 30 cents per hour. Among the approved projects is the completion of the courthouse, two road projects, street work in Waterford and sewing, on which only 25 women will be allowed to work.

Mrs. J. A. Speer reported $740.08 received for the tuberculosis funds from the Christmas seal sale.

An Age Afloat.

To most it is just The Fleet, symbol of the power and disciplined force of a mighty Nation. To the philosopher, sitting in whatever contemplation is possible in these times, it is rather the complete picture of man's technical achievement, the steel armada backed by the towering skyline of Manhattan.

As glimpsed by the camera from soaring airplanes—those further expressions of inventive genius—the huge ships may shew us how far our civilization has advanced. Each vessel a world by itself, capable, if need be, of supplying within its riveted confines all the needs of man. Never out of touch with shore. Able to move in darkness, storm or fog along straight, immutable lines. Making their own light to shine, creating their own power. Almost independent of the whim and weakness of man. As nearly complete a machine as there is anywhere. Pliable, speedy, controllable, as completely divorced from Nature as any machine may be.

More than any other instrument of man's design, the battleship clearly shows the direction in which our technicians, those priests of modern life, have turned the course of human destiny. As it has been in the case of the warships, so it has been in other lines. Design, invention, science, have paralleled their quest for a fuller life with the development of more efficacious ways of dealing death.

This is doubtless attributable to mankind's most ancient goat—Human Nature. Ship after ship, machine after machine, passed majestically, thrillingly, up the river, and a Nation stopped to stare, and wonder, and applaud the gorgeous, overpowering spectacle. What moral there may be in this is not too plain. But the fact remains that as man has built up his civilization through the steady perfecting of machines, so the machine in most perfected form is necessary to guard this civilization from disaster.

In the review of the fleet we see both the glory and the tragedy of our age. The symbol of cooperative strength, the symbol of ungovernable passions. Man, despite the advance of technics, is still so primitive that he must use the very epitome of the machine age for the same purposes of defense and offense for which the Neanderthaler constructed his flint-tipped club.

To The South Seas.

Three youths in a sloop sailed from Washington recently for the South Seas. They received due publicity. The reason the departure of the yachtsmen was news is that millions of Americans, forced to stay at their humdrum tasks, find meager solace in dreaming of escape. Most of them can get no farther away than the golf course from the routine that is their lot. The South Seas are very distant and idyllic.

Those three young men will have adventure. They will be thrilled, and at times they may be in real danger as their little boat is tossed about. They will have to work hard, keeping the sloop in order, seeing that things are ship-shape. When finally they are safely home again they will be able to say that they have lived through a grand adventure of the sort that few are able to experience.

But if this trio had not had the means to escape from the conventionalities of our civilization they might also have lived through adventure. They might also have been thrilled. Possibly their lives would have been risked. They might have found an opportunity to work hard, to help bring to ship-shape order a chaotic condition.

For, as they were preparing to hoist the jib and lift the anchor most unusual events were taking place in their home town, events that were not humdrum whatever else may be said of them, events which made as vivid an impression as any trip to the South Seas.

For the home of the three youths was Toledo, Ohio.

"Us Lambs."

All concern over the state of Gen. Johnson's health—resulting from his recent sojourn in a hospital—was instantly dissipated when he began his address on Thursday night. In fact, the General's rapid-fire barrage of expletives raises a question as to whether he has ever been in such excellent form.

Dead cats, crustaceans and chiselers have given place to nation wreckers, connoisseurs of rotten eggs, scribes and pharisees and slitherers. NRA may be settling down to routine, but there is nothing static about the vocabulary of its chief exponent. No code has encrusted his imagination nor checked his overproduction of billingsgate. And, what is still more refreshing, the public can now sit back and enjoy these verbal ebullitions, secure in the realization that they proceed, not from the mouth of a big, bad wolf—not even from the screeching Blue Eagle—but merely from one of "us lambs."

The Blank Check Policy.

A few days ago Harry L. Hopkins celebrated the first anniversary of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration by explaining what a "fine job" he has done. The unemployed have been "taken care of" for a year, and it has cost the Government only $1,500,000,000. Mr. Hopkins was not only well satisfied with this achievement; he was enthusiastic. He was looking forward to another successful year of squandering. What has been done in the past, he said, speaking of the President's relief policy, "is an indication of what he will do in the future."

The word "indication" seems to have been carefully chosen. For the Administration is asking Congress to appropriate $1,322,000,000 for relief activities, including public works, and to write a blank check for perhaps several billions more. And the House is preparing to invoke its "gag" rule to put this measure through.

It was under the blanket authority granted to the President to spend about $1,850,000,000 last year that the extravagant and wasteful CWA blossomed and withered last winter. The FERA was given a free hand to experiment with unemployment panaceas while the fundamental necessities of an adequate employment exchange system, and of self-supporting unemployment insurance, were virtually ignored. The result is that the country has been saddled with the most costly, inefficient and demoralizing doles system on record.

In addition to the $1,322,000,000 carried by the new relief bill, the FERA has an unexpended balance of several hundred million dollars. No accurate estimates of relief needs seem to be available—they do not need to be as long as the Treasury doors stand open to Mr. Hopkins. But even if the FERA should continue its extravagant policies, and part of the $1,322,000,000 should be used for public works, that fund should certainly be sufficient to support any intelligently-directed relief program until Congress meets next January. Entirely aside from Constitutional objections there appears to be no legitimate argument for authorizing the President to draw freely for relief purposes upon the unexpended funds of the RFC and the PWA. What is the purpose of the Administration in asking such an unprecedented grant of power? The mere request suggests that a way is being prepared for new experiments that could not meet with the approval of Congress.

One essential principle of democratic government is that the Executive should clearly specify the purposes for which it asks appropriations. Another essential principle is that the Legislature should closely analyze these projects and demand a strict accounting for all money spent. Both of these principles are thrown into the discard by the casual slap-dash manner in which the White House has demanded, and the House is tending to accept, authority to expend almost unlimited sums for unspecified ends.

April Trade.

Exports from the United States during April amounted to $179,000,000 as compared with $105,000,000 in the same month last year, and $135,000,000 in April, 1932. The adjusted index of the Department of Commerce was still 50 per cent below the average of 1923-1925, despite the rise in prices that has occurred during the past year, and devaluation of the dollar which has reduced the gold value of our exports.

With due allowance for these factors, it is evident that the actual volume of our export trade is much lower than the dollar values indicate. Certainly, there is no indication that the stimulus resulting from the reduced gold value of the dollar has been pronounced. As comparisons are being made, moreover, with a period that marked the lowest depth of the business depression, the recent rise in both export and import activity is probably due in large part to the improvement in business.

While sufficient time has not elapsed to test fully the effect of dollar devaluation upon our foreign trade, and especially upon the relation of exports to imports, it is safe to conclude that the anticipated revival of that trade will not be obtained by manipulating the exchange value of the dollar. Other countries are able to protect themselves very successfully against machinations of that sort by raising new protective barriers or competing in the game of currency devaluation.

Our best hope of expanding export trade lies in a policy that encourages an exchange of goods under reciprocal tariff agreements. Although there is no reason to expect a miraculous renaissance of foreign commerce through passage of the Administration's tariff bill, it would establish a basis for friendly negotiations and would be more conducive to positive results than a policy which antagonizes and alarms the nations that afford market outlets for our surplus products.

A Constructive Approach.

The provisions of the steel code have been revised to meet criticisms of the basing-point price system and to eliminate opportunities for open and concealed price fixing. Only experts are competent to judge whether the changes will meet all legitimate objections to the present code, and even experts will doubtless disagree. However, the layman can hardly fail to be favorably impressed by the cautious method of procedure which has been followed.

Radical revision of the existing basing-point system, which has been in operation for many years, is not contemplated, and there is no sweeping abolition of the "constructive" transportation charges which have been the subject of complaint. However desirable such changes may be in theory (and the question is a highly debatable one), it is recognized that a sudden break with established practices might prove disastrous. Instead of passing snap judgment upon the highly controversial basing point system, therefore, the Administration has ordered the Federal Trade Commission and the NRA to study the system further with a view to determining its effect upon both producers and consumers.

It was a foregone conclusion that most of the hastily drawn codes would have to be revised after an initial period of trial. Counsel for the NRA recently stated that the legality and the economic effects of the steel code had never been determined and could not be when the code was presented for approval. Some critics claimed that the basing-point system was essentially monopolistic, and economically unsound. It was also alleged that the waiting period under the code after filing of prices would lead to price fixing. Representatives of the steel industry maintained, on the other hand, that the code would not interfere with the maintenance of competitive conditions. So the agreement became operative, with the understanding that it would be revised after an opportunity had been given to test its practical results.

This is the constructive way in which to meet criticism of the codes. Provisions that work well in one case are often utterly unsuited to another industry. Practices that are beneficial in one instance may work serious injury in another case. Experience and expert knowledge are required to apply constructive criticism to the needs of particular industries. Sweeping general denunciations of methods of price fixation, and of other control policies, serve no useful purpose. They merely obstruct the activities of those who are trying to secure effective revisions of existing defective codes.

Time To Reflect.

Appropriate opposition to the proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act has developed on Capitol Hill. The Administration is still driving toward enactment of these vast new powers for the Secretary of Agriculture, but it is encountering increasing hostility. Democratic Senators, who take their stand on loyalty to the traditional principles of that party, are leading the fight.

The campaign to bring all producers, processors and distributors of agricultural products under complete domination by the AAA is gradually being visualized in its true significance. In the beginning the AAA disguised its request for sweeping new powers by referring to the bill as merely a "clarification" measure. Analysis of the measure indicates rather that its real purpose is to make the Secretary of Agriculture a czar over the farmer and those who deal with him. When opposition arose AAA spokesmen came forth with amendments to the amendments. But even these contemplate an unprecedented grant of authority over private industry to the new bureaucracy.

Two factors have contributed to the tide of public opinion which is running against the plans of the AAA. One is the retreat of the NRA from the field of intrastate business regulation, and the other is the drought. The attitude of Gen. Johnson, in this respect, stands out in sharp contrast to that of Secretary Wallace. While the NRA has begun to recognize that there are limits beyond which centralization defeats its ends, the AAA is still seeking to extend its domination to every activity related to farming.

The drought is the other factor which encourages a certain healthy cynicism. Of course, when officials decreed a broad program of curtailment in early spring they had no means of knowing that crops in 27 States would be seared by a blazing sun and dry winds. But that does not avert the problem of farmers who are facing a season of very meager harvests. The drought has simply thrown the AAA out of gear. As Dr. Tugwell is saying, "Our policy may well be one of crop expansion" in view of the exigencies of the weather and difficulties confronting the international wheat agreement. But the burning sun on the prairies smiles mockery at any plans to increase crops now.

Neither the drought nor unrestrained foreign competition can be remedied by a reckless grant of new powers to the AAA. It is time to reflect soberly on the advantages and disadvantages to date; not to rush headlong into a new venture sprung upon Congress suspiciously near the close of an exhausting session.

But Think Of The Washing!

It really is too bad that Cousin Theodore is not living. Although the Dionne family is Canadian it is unlikely that he would allow an international boundary line to interfere with an appropriate indorsement of Father Dionne's answer to the threat of race suicide.

Well we remember a Vermont family of 17 living children, each one of whom grew up to be an officer in the township where they lived, whose father still proudly possesses a letter of praise from the sage of Oyster Bay. But they appeared in progressive stages of no more than two at a time. Every so often, even today, some newspaper rediscovers them in their hillside village and travels there to interview them. They still run the town, even if one of them occupies the office of fence viewer so that they may boast that each of the 17 is an officer of a village which has hardly any other citizens.

The little Dionne babies, it now appears, are going to the Chicago Fair, if they survive. They will thus become the youngest self-supporting babies in the world and the envy of harried fathers everywhere. We don't know what the law is about the appearance of minors in entertainments in Chicago, but for the sake of Father Dionne we hope the authorities are lenient. For the heart of fatherhood everywhere goes out to this poor fellow, who must feed and clothe five young ladies at an age when a plenitude of panties far overreaches style of same in importance.

As Father's Day approaches we take off our hat to the elder Dionne. We hope he gets a good price for his daughters at Chicago. And, may we add, one fair like Chicago's, and one family like his, is quite enough. May the Dionne sisters thrive long and lustily on the proceeds of the exhibition, and may both Father and Mother Dionne live to see the day when the quintet is happily married off—to five prosperous brothers.

"Nothing ages a person so fast as loneliness," asserts a physician. This explains why the good die young.

Inflation and Trade.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial of Monday on commercial policy omitted perhaps the most important factor in connection with any discussion of the necessity for increasing rates of duty because of increased costs under the NRA, namely, the depreciation of the dollar. In buying goods from France or other gold standard countries, it now takes 1,700 of our 59-cent dollars to buy what could be bought a little over a year ago for $1,000. (This assumes that the foreign price has remained unchanged, whereas, in fact, prices abroad as here tended to rise.) If the merchandise is subject to a 50 per cent duty the $1,000 worth of goods in February of 1933 would cost $1,500, now it would cost $1,700 plus $850 or $2,550. If the merchandise were subject to duty by weight instead of value the duty would, of course, remain unchanged. If the duty came to $400 the cost in February, 1933, would be $1,400 and now it would be $2,100, an increase of 50 per cent.

The American dollar has also depreciated in relation to currencies which are fluctuating in value. Something over a year ago the yen was worth 20 cents; now it is worth 30 cents. One thousand dollars then bought 5,000 yen worth of goods; now it will buy only about 3,300 yen worth. This change of relationship in the last year is what would have been produced had the currencies remained stable and a duty of 50 per cent ad valorem had been imposed on all Japanese goods.

It appears, therefore, that the depreciation of the dollar has put American products in a much stronger position in relation to foreign competition than they had a year ago. Other factors, of course, do not remain the same; but insofar as they are not altered the depreciation of the dollar has allowed and will allow increases of domestic prices by anywhere up to 70 per cent over what they were before the New Deal began without requiring increase of duties to offset the higher costs under the NRA.

Japanese competition has been so successful that it should be raising the wages and standard of living in Japan, thus restoring fair balance. It would do this save for two factors—the uncivilized birth rate and the taxation imposed to pay for the conquest of Asia. Until the bully of Asia becomes civilized special and very high protective duties will doubtless be required against Japanese products.

B. BAREFOOT.

China and the Crane.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Reading all these articles about the "Fleet's In" and "Cheesecloth Ladies" has revived my interest in art and artists. On the northwest balcony of the old National Museum I found some examples of photographic art that I believe really worthy of study. The pictures I refer to are a collection designated as "Pictorial Manchuria" and all are taken by Japanese artists. They really compare very favorably with the permanent collection given the museum by Joseph Petrocelli.

Some of the pictures show old China, and others took my breath away with scenes in the new industrial parts of Manchuria. "Morning at Market," with merchant and buyer in a dark stall, and "Bit of Life in Countryside," with its quiet old-home note, were in sharp contrast to the pictures of blast furnaces, refineries and great ships.

The study called "Crane and Coolie," by its title and its content, really expresses the spirit of the show. The dragon is waking, China is becoming a living, breathing force in the world. One feels that with the coolie operating the crane the old walled cities and ancestor worship are soon to be things of the past. FLORIDA CRACKER.

Washington, May 28.

Memorial Day Observance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Memorial Day in Washington, the Nation's Capital, should be one to which the whole Nation might look for guidance in the observation of the day. Instead, within sight and sound of, and during the memorial services at Arlington National Cemetery, a horse show and circus, sponsored by the military post at Fort Myer, was staged near main entrances to the cemetery, with an entry by the daughter of the President, advertised as a drawing card.

This is all quite right and proper in itself, but not on Memorial Day. A sense of the eternal fitness of things, as well as Scripture, tells us "there is a time for every purpose." We can not hope to have countless individuals observe the day as is fitting and proper, but it is not too much to expect it of those high in command of our Government, especially our military, in whose honor, for past achievements and sacrifices, the day was originally set apart.

It would seem there is yet a wide field for teachers of patriotism to instill in the minds of the thoughtless that Memorial Day is not a time for pleasure seeking and sporting contests, but a time for reverent reflection in paying grateful tribute and homage to those who served us in our hour of need.

LAURA T. HOTT.

Wanted: A Hercules.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is no exaggeration to say that ours is the worst age the world has ever known. Crime and wickedness are rapidly choking out all wholesome growths of virtue, justice, and righteousness. Men are no longer good, nor do they care to be good.

There is much talk about crime; but little can be done to check the course of crime until a Hercules comes to make a thorough cleaning of the Augean stables of accumulated moral filth.

Instead of a Roosevelt, who is engaged merely in the task of getting work for men who ought to get work for themselves, the times call for a Martin Luther or a St. Francis of Assisi, who will bring back to men the knowledge of a God who loves good, and hates evil. The state can not teach men this knowledge; neither can the present church. We need a new prophet and a new church. Unless we return to the virtues and decencies of life, the black cloud over us will never lift.

"Cast away from you all your transgressions whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"

Silver Lining.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: According to a bill in Congress, the Administration is to purchase millions of ounces of silver. I can not understand why it is necessary; gold is recovered from sea water; artificial fertilizer from the air, and we are told that "every cloud has a silver lining." Why not scrape the clouds and obtain an inexhaustible supply? Would it not be purer? The shades of William Jennings Bryan will weep when they hear of this method.

"Barbarous Hell-a-Baloo."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your broad view of things, could you say there is anyone of influence or intelligence to whom one could appeal in the matter of the hideous uproar inflicted upon us by these Connecticut avenue cars? All day long and nearly all night 'till after midnight they go roaring past here every minute with a noise like thundering cannon. It is an idiotic idea to spend millions "beautifying" this city and permit this crude and barbarous hell-a-baloo which would be a disgrace to a Hottentot village. And the American pretends to be civilized!

It certainly is not fair to these excellent hotels to be driving their patrons away to more agreeable and restful locations.

"NRA Tommyrot."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Having just read the news article "NRA Drops Price Fixing," I wish to thank you for this bit of good news. It seems the press has been wont to go along with this notorious price-fixing scheme to the point of censoring much news the public should have.

We have been led to believe the public was overwhelmingly in favor of this "New Deal" movement, whereas personal contact with the public belies this, and I dare say if the press will give us a break this NRA tommyrot will be relegated to the scrap heap of useless experiments before we even have a chance to vote the blunderers out of office.

Strange Boast.

Charles II started it, and now Scrutator, headlined columnist of the London Times, has taken it up. They both contend that England has the best climate in the world.

Scrutator is aware that there are those who disagree with his dictum, but that makes no appreciable difference to him. He unsheathes his snickersnee and lays about him vigorously, as follows:

"The grumblers at our weather are wrong and Charles II was right when he said that there are more days in England which it is pleasant to spend out-of-doors than in any other country in the world. . . .

"Nature has done much for our 'sceptered isle' and our 'happy breed of men.' It has given us what is, in spite of fogs, probably the best climate in the world, because the most equable and least distracted by extremes.

"From May Day to Goodwood there is more of the brilliancy and pageantry or life here in London than in any other city of the world, and the raw materials of human happiness exist here in greater abundance than anywhere else."

One is disinclined to take issue with Scrutator's assertions as to the "brilliancy and pageantry" of life in London, for it is perhaps possible to make out a good case for his thesis, even though many will dispute his claims.

But his enthusiasm for the undoubted delights of London is far more comprehensible than his rhapsodies over the English weather. That weather, to be sure, can be very lovely, but it can also be as beastly as one can find between the Arctic and the Antarctic.

What is more ghastly than a pea soup fog, which not only shrouds the streets of the British capital as in a heavy blanket, but which even penetrates the homes and renders visibility there difficult? What could be worse than the damp, penetrating winter weather of England, which seeps into the very marrow of one's bones?

No, Scrutator, there are many, many things in your beautiful country in which you may well take pride, but the climate is not one of them.

The Post Impressionist

1,001 Nights

Postoffice, Saturday.

We sing, in dirge-like measure, the memory of a great National institution. We mourn the passage of another American tradition.

For three months, three weary months, have we sought a poker-game in Washington. And we have sought in vain.

Indeed, does anybody play poker anywhere any more? Seriously, we mean—as of old?

They don't.

Yet time was when poker was The American Game. It was more American than baseball.

In its native country, our own dear land, poker brooked no rival as an indoor sport. Born during the hardy days of our pioneer ancestors, who sired it, the five-card contest handed down and carried on the lofty ideals of the old and ever advancing Frontier—of the '49 Gold Rush—of the night after the round-up—of the Army Post when an army post was a small body of boys in blue completely surrounded by Indians.

Upon any thousand and one nights in America you would find more than a thousand and one games going.

They went on not only at the clubs in the cities:

In every village and every suburb neighbors met together, at least one evening a week, and tested their neighborly spirit by nickel-poker, three-of-a-kind or better calling for a jack-pot, and every straight or its superior demanding the variously spelled ram-doozle. House by house took turns at entertaining; after play, the hostess produced the "cold supper" while the winners rushed the growler.

In many sections, poker became a family-pastime. A knowledge of the game was an integral part of every American's patriotic education, and father and mother wanted continual practice in order to keep keen for those weekly neighborhood contests, anyhow. So, between such contests, the children—as soon as their next day's school-lessons had been learned—would linger around the family lamp and surrender their lunch-money, via penny-ante, to the old folks.

Why, the New York Sun ran columns of poker-teaching! In the "Letters to the Editor" of every newspaper, poker-questions were asked, poker-controversies waged and poker disputes decided. There were hundreds of editorials on the Doctrine of Chances as applied to the Great Game.

* * *

All Congress, both houses, played poker. The incomparable Calhoun was said to have loved it. Henry Clay was declared frequently to have kept the Speaker's chair vacant until a poker-session had ended, across the Avenue from the Capitol. Whenever a new European diplomat came to Washington—where, of course, it was his bounden duty to acquire and follow the customs of our country—he had scarcely presented his letter of credence before the reception room of his legation was crowded by Americans eager to "learn him poker."

* * *

Across strange seas and into remote regions, poker followed the Flag closer than does the Constitution. Long ere Lindbergh, poker had out-Lindberghed Lindbergh. It was our "thin line of 'eroes," our self-salaried Amusement Ambassador.

Foreigners, civilized and savage alike, were taught it by zealously Americanizing Americans. Peoples that had never heard of the United States heard of the glories of the U. S. A. across their gently dwindling stacks of chips. You called natives bluffing with a pair of deuces in London and Paris, Rome, Belgrade and Constantinople. You could pay your keep with a busted straight in Bergen, with a three-card flush in Somaliland. Then there began to appear excellent Chinese players in Shanghai—and poker had circled the earth. . . .

* * *

Did our trusted propagandists explain their propaganda too well? Sad truth it is that, at last, the teachers found their profession expensive. Perhaps they became debilitated when they undertook to pass the cocktail along with the buck. This much is sure: there being no more worlds to conquer, the conquered subtly imposed their own games upon the conquerors. Those erstwhile Americanizers trickled home with the alien-contrived duplicate-whist. It grew popular in an America weakened by too great successes; America next fell for auction and is now the hopeless slave of the contract habit. . . .

* * *

There are unthinking people who hold that contract is a better game than poker. There is no better game than poker, but we shall not discuss this issue. The point is that there is no game more American.

There are half-thinkers who declare that the poker decline is merely symptomatic of our general mechanization. We reply that, in such case, America's case is, anyhow, desperate. At all events, this country has surrendered bluff to skill, science to psychology, daring to mathematics. From the moment of that surrender, all our present troubles took on the nature of inevitability.

There is only one cure, and we doubt if it can be applied. A National society should be formed for the restoration of the National Card Game; the society should petition Congress. But will Congress care? There is not one poker game left among Congressmen, not one poker game left in Washington! Poker, like a player with less than jacks and no courage, has passed the opening—and has dropped out on the draw.

When a Groton Boy Goes Democratic.

MR. ROOSEVELT was, of course, warmly received at Groton yesterday. He is the President of the United States and a popular one. But I should like very much to know the thoughts that ran through the fathers and mothers who were also there to see their sons graduate. Many a dowager, I fancy, lifted her lorgnette and wrinkled her brow as she turned to her husband and asked: "Chauncey, how do you explain him?" It is something a lot of the rest of us can't do.

BARGERON.

If they make schools any more snobbish than Groton in this country I don't know of them. It is the last word in exclusiveness. There must be no question of one's "blood" and even then the matter of a youngster's entering Groton must be prepared early in his youth, if not, in fact, before he is born. Most of the youngsters who go there never in their lifetime get away from the exclusiveness which it instills.

• • • •

Mr. Roosevelt himself went there, and, if I am not mistaken, most of his other boys. Yet we have never had a more democratic family in the White House, and certainly not in a long time, at least, one who catered to the crowd so much or who was more popularly received in the same element.

It's one of our major paradoxes, I think. Never was a man born with more of a silver spoon in his mouth than Mr. Roosevelt. He has never done a lick of what the rest of us call work in his life. Save for his excursions into politics, his whole life has been one more or less of gentlemanly leisure.

Yet, ever since he has been in office his whole emphasis has been against those with whom he was reared and in favor of the crowd, or mob, if you prefer.

• • • •

Even at Gettysburg Wednesday on what used to be the occasion for honoring a gallant dead, but which has come to be pretty much of a political debating ground, he hurled but slightly veiled imprecations at the "rich" This has been the Administration's theme song, a steady plaint against the "selfish rich" who are seeking to thwart its plans.

Well, he certainly isn't talking about the rank and file of us when he talks this way. He must be talking about his "kind," so to speak, the boys who go to Groton and grow up in its wealthy tradition.

Surely as he walked into the graduation hall yesterday there must have been some mothers and fathers who thought, "There comes Franklin, who does not like us."

• • • •

I recall the strong feeling against Gifford Pinchot in Philadelphia Union League circles when he got the Republican gubernatorial nomination in 1930. They shuddered at the name as if you had mentioned something vulgar, something unclean. Yet Pinchot had come up with them, been reared in the velvet with them. But he had turned against them when he went into politics. What he had said of them in the primary campaign, then just ended, climaxed their disgust. In their eyes, the Pinchot boy had come to no longer have any of the attributes of a gentleman.

I'll bet there were mothers and fathers at Groton who thought of how far from the fold Mr. Roosevelt has strayed, and he must have felt some of the feeling of a prodigal coming home.

They say a laborer who works up to become a big executive has far less sympathy for his employes than the man who never labored in his life. Conversely it would seem that no one has less sympathy for his former exclusive associates than a Groton boy who goes in for the crowd.

What would have made a whale of a story at Groton would have been for a dowager, one who knew Mr. Roosevelt about 25 years ago, to walk up to him and shaking a wizened finger, ask "Franklin, why do you say such things about us and stir up the crowd?"

It's something I'd like to know myself.

Radicals, Reactionaries Joust For Rule of Germany's Future

Further Revolution May Come Under Urging of Militarists.

(Editor's Note: Following is the fourth of a series of ten articles on the puzzling European situation by Hamilton Fish Armstrong, who has just returned from a trip to the principal capitals. Mr. Armstrong deals extensively with the possibility of war abroad.)

IV. Germany: Revolution or Reaction?

By Hamilton Fish Armstrong

(Foreign Affairs Editor).

Is it possible to distinguish and appraise more exactly the contrary forces within the Nazi party mentioned in the two preceding articles?

First of all, there is the broad distinction between the top leadership on the one hand the storm troopers and their local leaders on the other. Since going to Berlin, many of the important Nazis have become caught in the governmental machine and find themselves forced by the logic of events to take account of unexpected political and economic forces, especially those which impinge on Germany from without. At the beginning they were proud of their ignorance of the rest of the world and looked out across Germany's frontiers only in order to decide what moveable property first to appropriate to their own uses.

In the months they have been in power they have learned that Germany is not self-contained to the same extent as France or the United States. As already emphasized, Germany depends on foreign exchange not merely to prosper but to live. If Hitler had come to power in one of the other countries named, he might have succeeded, in his early disregard of foreign forces and values simply by being logical and resolute. As it is, he has had to adapt his policy, or rather the tempo of his policy, to the realities of Germany's situation in the world.

To those realities, however, the Nazi rank and file naturally remain quite impervious, because they have never heard about them. No breath of Germany's real position has been allowed to reach them through either the spoken or the printed word. Their ignorance and consquent conceit is the more dangerous because there are also elements in the party leadership itself which maintains the revolutionary fervor of early Munich days, demand the most drastic sort of action to consolidate the regime and impose its "first principles" on opponents or waverers, and believe that in foreign policy the best course is to out-bluff the rest of the world and unhesitatingly to carry the swastika to the outposts of Deutschtum, regardless of risk or threat of reprisal. Some of them are doctrinaires, some are two-fisted adventurers. What of the resulting conflict—not of ultimate purpose—but of timing and method? And where does Hitler himself stand?

Goebbels and Rosenberg Named Among Radical Chiefs.

The "radical" chiefs are, among the doctrinaires, Dr. Joseph Goebbels, minister of public enlightment and propaganda; Dr. Alfred Rosenberg, director of the Pary "foreign office," editor of the Volkischer Beobachter," officially entrusted by Hitler on January 31, 1934, with control over the "intellectual and philosophical schooling and upbringing" of Nazis; and Herr Walter Darre, author of the famous "Neuadel aus Blut und Boden" and other "racist" works; among the men of action, Roehm, head of the S. A.; Ley, head of the labor front; Himmler, head of the S. S. (this praetorium guard is more conservative than the S. A., but Himmler personally is ranked as a radical); Streicher, leader of the Nuremberg Nazis and organizer of the Jewish boycott of April, 1933; and in general the party heads in the big cities throughout the Reich.

The former plan, instigate, propagandize; the latter execute, demonstrate, punish. Together they wage the battle of the masses against the classes. They rediscover and worship the Norse gods, they invent Nazi saints and fix their feast days, they believe Jewry is a cancer and take measures to extirpate it, they burn books and stage "spontaneous demonstrations of aroused public opinion," they audit the Nazi papers and magazines and make people buy them, they write the school text books and see that they are used, they organize and operate great money raising projects like the Winterhilfa for the deserving (i. e. Nazi) poor.

They plan and exact the compulsory and "voluntary" fees and donations to party funds, they watch and supervise through "block inspectors" the activities and contributions of every person in every block in every city in the country, they censor mail and tap telephone wires and tell people with foreign correspondence what to write, they preach self-sacrifice and subordination and the "hard" life, they show openly their contempt for judges, courts and other "technicalities," they plan and organize the continuous exhibitions of trophies and horrors from the last war and of sample arms and instruments for the next, they conduct the school children to these exhibits and explain the lessons they carry.

They plan the propaganda movies, write the propaganda speeches and edit many of the propaganda communiques which form the basis of all the German newspapers, they demonstrate and shout and threaten and imprison and beat.

In other words, they are sincere and practising Nazi revolutonaries.

Reactionaries Dislike Way Reich History Is Rewritten.

On the "reactionary" side (using the term loosely, as the word "radical" is used above) are Gen. Goering, Premier of Prussia and Reich minister of aviation, Dr. Schmitt, minister of industry, and many others, some of them original Nazis, others admitted from the Nationalist and other organizations at various stages of the party's development. They are supported outside the party ranks by Dr. Schacht, head of the Reichsbank, by Vice Chancellor von Papen, Baron von Neurath and other functionaries who were useful enough at one time or another to be allowed to keep some position, by certain old army officers and junkers who early threw in their lot with Hitler and who now hold Reichswehr or provincial posts. And of course by the big industrialists and bankers who helped finance the movement as insurance that its policies would not cross their business interests.

The mere enumeration of these reactionary forces shows their general policy—to put the old Germany back on the map of Europe, and to pay for the proceeding with as small a domestic social revolution as possible. Each category has some special reason for disliking or fearing the radicals. Some (Reichswehr officers and former Stahlhelm members particularly) do not relish the way Dr. Goebbels rewrites history and slurs the old German army; Goering, they point out to each other, was a Prussian officer, is of the "gentleman type," despite queer lapses, and considers that a disciplined army on the old lines is the best guaranty of effective government. (They were delighted when it was suggested that the S. A. would have to be demilitarized under the terms of any disarmament convention.)

Others think the anti-Jewish policy a mistake, both per se and for its effect abroad. Others want to mitigate the agricultural, industrial and labor policies of the 100 per cent Nazi theoreticians. Others are good Lutherans or good Catholics, and while agreeing that the churches should be divorced from political action cannot swallow the neopaganism of the Nazi "German Christians."

These diverse but powerful elements in the upper Nazi circles, and among their allies outside the party, have taken advantage of the painful economic situation and the distrust and hostility of Germany's neighbors to impress on Hitler many things which he did not know or care about knowing a few months ago. They hope they have convinced him that he must avoid radical socialistic experiments at home and must postpone adventures abroad until the military forces of Germany have become invincible, not merely in the eyes of the enthusiastic young Nazi storm troops, but in the cold and dispassionate opinion of the old German General Staff.

Radicals Run Through Entire Pillar of Nazism.

Hitler devotees tell you that he could throw Goering, Goebbels or any of the others overboard at a moment's notice without causing more than a ripple of excitement. In particular, it is always said, he could easily dispense with the radicals, that he tolerates them merely out of loyalty.

The facts do not seem to bear out this theory. The reactionaries are just part of the top crust of the party. But the radicals run vertically from the top to the bottom, and at the bottom spread out to include the whole rank and file of storm troopers and party workers, many of whom at one time were Communists or revolutionaries of one sort or another. Time after time they have forced the hand of the Fuhrer himself. It is true that he seems deliberately to have retreated somewhat from the glare of the public spotlight, that when he speaks he adopts a very general and often ambiguous or mystical tone; this is the chief basis for the view that he is preparing his followers for a transition, to some traditional form of conservative government.

But it is not yet clear that he is not simply trying to tide over a difficult phase, letting the contrary forces exhaust themselves in conflict over one point after another without himself assuming too much responsibility, so that if the lower strata of the party becomes thoroughly indignant and aroused he could resume the role of active revolutionary, "return to Munich," and start again the execution of the radical social program.

Hitler really craves for Germany the dignity, power and prosperity which he feels were stolen from her in a moment when she had forgotten her true heroic nature and allowed herself to be shamefully betrayed by pacifists, socialists and other agents, witting and unwitting, of her traditional enemies. To the extent that his reactionary advisers wish to see German might be reestablished in the world by sure and certain methods he is with them.

But in his soul does he not still wish to establish inside of Germany a balance of powers which would in effect ruin the old privileged order, both industrial and agricultural? Engrossed as he always was with slogans and parades and the daily party combat, he never paused to notice that in one important particular his aspirations were contradictory: German industry was opposed to every interest to the economic estate which he favored both as a social necessity and as a party bait, and German industry was one of the bases of the military power which he craved in order to exact from the world, without humiliating delay, the accord of equal political and military rights and the return of every inch of land over which the German flag ever flew or where any Germans dwell.

As he is that most powerful of all the varieties of a demagogue, a sincere and naive one, he probably suffers today from the consequences of finding himself in this dilemma, but from none more than from the fact that he is unable to speak and act impetuously at any and every moment. For this reason alone, but also because he is one of the most consistent and obstinate men alive, he might be glad to sink back, if the concatenation of domestic events so decided and permitted, into the role of revolutionary leader of the German masses.

Position of Revolution Is Paramount Question.

All this is speculation. We are on securer ground, however, when we say that the essential issue between the Nazi radicals and reactionaries is as to whether or not the revolution is over. If it is over, the large industrialists, the junker land owners, the upper classes generally, can write down on the profit side of the ledger great sums of money many of them spent on financing Hitler, and they can look back without regret at the various humiliations which they endured when they first rushed forward to embrace the Nazi movement. For the old Nationalist party, which was theirs, they will in fact have substituted the National Socialist party, which will be theirs also, with the added merit of being free from parliamentary encumbrances.

But if the revolution is not yet accomplished, if it has been merely pausing rather than swinging back to the right, then the reactionary classes are done for and the future belongs to the radicals, who may turn out to be very far to the left indeed.

So far as foreign policy goes there is not an atom of difference between the immediate aims of the radicals and the ultimate aims of the conservatives. The goal is the same, whichever has his hand on the wheel; the only difference is in the timing of the signal for full speed ahead. The radicals sneer at Von Neurath for condescending to argue armament "technicalities," they deride the idea of returning to participate in the Geneva "swindle," they hate the treaty with Poland and tell each other it is only a hoax, they would have given Habicht a free hand and every encouragement to invade Austria and annex it regardless.

They fume at the suggestion that exports might be stimulated as a result of calming foreign opinion by ceasing to persecute the Jews, and retaliate by staging some new anti-Jewish demonstration. All temporizing and negotiation are to them un-Nazi and un-German. Their private "party circulars" do not hesitate to criticize Dr. Schacht and Minister Schmitt for pandering to foreign interests, or Gen. von Blomberg, Reichswehr minister, for resisting amalgamation with the S. A. They prefer a party force like the S. A. to a state force like the Reichswehr, partly because the S. A. is "theirs," but also because it would turn out a new German army every three months, whereas the Reichswehr would turn one out only every year.

They are crazy to be at grips with some foe, to show their valor, to have excitement, to suffer, to die. Ignorant, restive and bold, they can not understand the comparative deliberation of the government since the early part of 1934.

Hitler in background and psychology is really more like them than the reactionaries. When Commander Roehm abuses the "reactionary elements hanging onto the coattails of the revolution" and says the S. A. will know how "ruthlessly to get rid of them," he probably strikes a sympathetic echo in Hitler's mind, where the echoes of many similar statements of his own must still linger. But Hitler has not seen how to proceed, if he is to avoid a premature showdown, other than at the pace set by his more hard-headed and cautious advisers. They tell him that while the S. A. shouts and parades they are quietly at work laying the foundations of such solid military power that when the time comes Germany will be able to act decisively and successfully.

Hitler does not shirk the idea of war as such any more than do Gen. von Blomberg or Gen. Goering on one side or Dr. Goebbels or the S. A. chieftains on the other; glorification of death on the battlefield, a mystical avocation of happiness in the spirit-land of Norse heroes, have come from his mouth too often to be anything but sincere. But advised by the shade of Bismarck, by the still living spirit of Potsdam, he does shirk the idea of a defeat; and he has adopted the idea that if Germany can quietly accumulate enough power, outside opposition will suddenly crack, and domination in Europe, perhaps even in the world, can be secured by the threat of force and not by its use.

His dread today is that before Germany lays the bases for unchallengeable supremacy her neighbors, seeing the material force to hold Nazi Germany in check slipping through their fingers, might suddenly decide to take sanctions before it is too late.

Mr. Armstrong's fifth article will appear Monday.

Federal Board Acts In Gasoline War

Charleston, W. Va., June 1 (Spl.). West Virginia's gasoline price war has been taken up to the National Petroleum Board, it was announced today by John W. Wright, chairman of the State Petroleum Code committee. He asked the board to make a ruling on the situation.

The price-cutting war started with reductions in the Huntington territory in January. In Charleston gasoline is being sold at 19½ cents a gallon. At St. Albans a few miles west it is retailing 3 cents cheaper and a mile or two beyond it is selling at 15 cents. All Wayne County dealers have gone on strike, locking their stations because of underselling conditions in nearby areas.

Howard Gray Heads Union Bridge Firemen

Westminster, Md., June 1 (Spl.). The annual election of officers of the Union Bridge Volunteer Fire Company, held during the county convention there yesterday, resulted in the following being named: President, Howard Gray; vice president, W. D. Ogle; recording secretary, Lewis Baker; corresponding secretary, George C. Eichelberger; treasurer, George R. Lowe; chief, M. E. Gray, and assistant chief, M. Yingling.

Treasurer Seeks Reelection.

Westminster, Md., June 1 (Spl.). Paul F. Kuhns, Carroll County treasurer, has announced his candidacy for reelection, subject to the Republican primaries.

Cooperation and Crisis

DESPITE any querulousness toward political books I mentioned the other day, here are two I very much enjoyed. They are volumes in the "Social Action" series, edited by Dr. Alvin Johnson, director of the New School for Social Research, and published by W. W. Norton ($1.75 each). Dr. Johnson states the motto: "The plan for these books assumes that the social-economic structure will have to be rebuilt while the tenants are living in it, therefore without the application of explosives." Of course you may not agree with this—either first clause or second—but in that case you owe it to your intellectual perspective to learn what these little books have to say.

THEO. HALL.

"The New Internationalism" is by Dr. Clark Foreman, for several years a member of the American council of the Geneva School of International Studies, and now on the staff of the Department of the Interior.

Both capitalist and socialist internationalism have had their day and are now on the wane, he says, and he devotes several chapters to the factual history behind that statement. He sees, inevitable in the offing "a new form of internationalism, one in which the countries will participate as balanced, integrated units with inter-governmental trade and inter-governmental culture organizations." For the purely observable world-wide tendency is that "government regulation of the ecomonic life of a country is becoming increasingly necessary; it not only tends to grow cumulatively in each country and to bring about national planning, but also to force other countries to the same course."

The book makes no pretense at being anything else but a very broad view of the world situation. Readers who want that kind of balancing of details and allowance for human confusion which is called "practical," will think Dr. Foreman overly academic. But we do have grave need for the outlining of large directions which he gives us.

• • • •

And we have another need from the scholarly mind—the definition of terms. The following passage was a side issue in Dr. Foreman's book, but it seems peculiarly valuable.

"One result of the rapid movement of facts out of keeping with the old theories is the consequent confusion of terms . . . There has been much speculation in America as to whether the Roosevelt Administration would go 'to the right' or 'to the left,' 'fascist,' or 'communist,' with very little common understanding of the terms. The very use of this European terminology is an indication of the artificiality of the discussion. 'Right' and 'Left' are terms that arose in France because of the seating of the deputies with respect to their loyalty to the feudal ideas . . . These terms have never been reflected in American political life, and the use of them or the corresponding English terms of 'Conservative' and 'Liberal' are apt to be most misleading with respect to America.

"Those who talk equally glibly of Communism and Fascism do so without much effort to make the terms correspond to facts. To speak of Communism as the system which prevailed during the period of the War of Intervention in Russia and at the same time as the present system in Russia is to miss completely the changes which have taken place there. If by Communism is meant state ownership of the land and industry, then it exists in Russia and is closely approached in other countries. But if by Communism is meant the equality and fraternity of prewar theories, then it not only does not exist in Russia but is officially repudiated there as a sentimental petty bourgeois concept . . .

"Fascism is a term used in America to condemn almost anything which is not in harmony with the theory of socialist internationalism. More often now used by critics to apply to Germany than to Italy, where it originated, the term is meant by them to connote Jewish oppression, violence and bombast, rather than the fundamental changes which these excrescences conceal.

"The Fascism of Italy is quite changed from what it was in the days of castor-oil treatments and street fighting with Socialists, and to talk of it as if it signified only such activities is to strike at windmills."

• • • •

Most people, I'm sure, will find the temper of Lindsay Rogers' "Crisis Government" more congenial and understandable. For although Rogers is professor of public law at Columbia University and therefore plainly in the academic fold, he was also for ten years a member of the New York City commission on the clothing industry, and for six months a deputy administrator under the NRA. In other words, he knows Rome was not built in two weeks.

So all through his able and shrewd discussion of the spread of dictatorships in Europe and the methods by which America is meeting its crisis, runs a cautious Yankee streak. "Anyone who has seen government and industry at close range," he writes, "should be convinced that attempts by the former to administer the latter would in the United States be accompanied by waste and suffering far greater than the waste and suffering of a rugged individualism which is neither rugged nor individualistic."

"But," as he notes, "all this is simply to suggest the difficulty, not the impossibilty, of national plans." That is his whole spirit.

And his very prudence gives weight to one of the most encouraging sentences I've ever read. It occurs in the middle of his splendid chapter on statesmanship. "There are increasing signs," writes Prof. Rogers of modern statesmen, "that the taking of risks in the name of intelligence is the road not alone to the favorable verdict of history, but also to the continued approval of parliaments and electorates."

A book to make politicians realize that it would be worth its weight in gold.

The National Gallery

ROBERT LOW BACON, Representative from New York. A Long Island, Harvard bred socialite, former supporter of Theodore Roosevelt and the Progressive party, this legislator brought a colorful military background extending from the Plattsburg training camps to World War service to the Capital when he was elected to the Sixty-eighth Congress. A member of many organizations, military, patriotic, social and civic, he stood high in Republican privy councils when that party was in power. Present at all succeeding sessions, his loud, commanding voice has not often been heard of late. A large, powerful man, he waged a vigorous fight for revision of securities act on the House floor, charging that it was impeding recovery. Patrician born 49 years ago at Jamaica Plain, Boston, Mass.

Such a large proportion of those who have been pictured by Mr. Robles have asked for the originals that The Washington Post is saving all these drawings to honor the requests of any future members of "The National Gallery."

Another Letter From a Dad To His Red-Headed Daughter

By Robert Quillen

My dear Louise:

Some years ago a friend of mine heard me comment on a schoolman's unusual popularity.

"Why, yes," said he, "the man's a good politician."

He did not mean to be complimentary, but the schoolman deserved no criticism. He was a politician only in the sense that his courtesy and friendliness made people like him.

People proud of their independence are quick to ridicule one who tries to win the good will of his neighbors; but it is simply a matter of being well-mannered, and where is the harm in that?

One of them, being manned by devil-may-care youngsters, called a spade a spade in such a smart-Aleck and offensive way that everybody's feelings were hurt.

The other, sedate and discreet, seemed almost to gush in its effort to compliment everybody mentioned.

The first got the circulation, for everybody wished to see what impudent thing it would say next; but the other got the advertising and the profit.

The business of currying favor in a servile yes-man way is always contemptible. You can't grovel without resembling a spiritless hound dog that is crawling to escape a kick.

But anybody free of an inferiority complex can keep an independent spirit and a decent self-respect without being defiant or hard-boiled. Common courtesy doesn't indicate a craven spirit, and it isn't a form of boot-licking.

If the effort to be agreeable is "playing politics," the world can stand a lot more politicians.

I wouldn't have you give an inch where a principle is involved, and I hope you will always have spunk enough to stand up for your rights, but do the best you can to give people reason to like you.

You can't go far wrong if you treat the humblest as though they were somebody and treat the great as you do the humble.

Love, DAD.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

Dickens' "Life of Our Lord."

There are many persons who think this book should not have been published, reasoning that if Dickens had wished it to appear in print he would have attended to the matter himself. The book was certainly never meant for the public, being written wholly and exclusively for his children. He wished them to grow up in intimate association with the Divine Master; and hence prepared this work for their especial use and inspiration.

But whether it ought to have been printed or not is a matter now of only academic interest; it is printed.

It is a pity, perhaps, to associate money with a work of this nature, and yet, as the market is the best possible test of the popularity of an author, the price paid for this manuscript is so staggering as to command attention. Years ago, when Kipling was at the height of his popularity, it was announced that for every new article or book he wrote he received one shilling a word. A man, who hoped to get his autograph, wrote him a letter stating that he had heard that Mr. Kipling received one shilling a word for everything he wrote. "I inclose one shilling, for which will you please send me one written word?" and Kipling replied: "Thanks."

Now it is reported that for this manuscript of Dickens the publishers paid $15 a word! This is good evidence, if any were needed, for the tremendous popularity of Dickens in 1934. Dickens from his grave commands a far higher price than any man or woman now living.

What I myself like best of all in this "Life of Our Lord" is the interpretation Dickens makes of Christianity, of virtue, of goodness. He wrote this work, while he was engaged in the composition of "David Copperfield," about the middle of the nineteenth century; the very height of mid-Victorianism. Then, goodness and Christianity were represented largely as negative. A Christian was one who did not do things; he did not dance, play cards, go to the theater, or indulge in any amusements on Sunday. Hence, people who were called virtuous were often regarded not only as dull, but disagreeable. "I saw at once you were not a Christian; you have so kind a face!"

Now, Dickens went right to the Gospels instead of to their self-appointed interpreters; he made Christianity wholly a positive religion—a religion of kindness, tact, consideration, good-fellowship, sympathy, generosity, absence of social snobbery, a real following of the belief in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

To place the emphasis on positive rather than negative conduct was uncommon in 1850, and Dickens deserves credit.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

Howler Gets Caught in a Story.

Now listen, all you little folks: When anybody tells a story just to keep out of trouble, he most always gets into more and worse trouble. You can fool folks for a little while, but they will catch up with you, and then you are in sure enough trouble. That's the way it was with Howler.

When Uncle Joe had been all around his place, and had found out how many of his things Blackie's crowd had taken, he got awfully mad. Aunt Judy come out and looked over her chicken yard and her garden, and she found that lots and lots of her things were gone.

She went over and sat down under the grape arbor and cried like a baby.

"Oh, I thought Blackie was dead, or I never would have gone away from home. How I would love to wring his neck! My biggest red rooster and my old granddaddy turkey gobbler gone! I'll never rest till I get his skin, and I'll never, never go away from home again."

Made Him Madder.

This did not help matters any with Uncle Joe. It just made him madder, for he was like other men, and hated awfully to see his wife cry.

So he said: "Don't cry, Judy. Go on to the house. We won't go away any more, and Blackie Bear won't come here any more. I am going right over to see Mr. Man, and he will fix that black rascal this time. I'll bet he went to Mr. Man's house, too."

When Mr. Man saw Uncle Joe coming, he knew something was the matter, for he had never seen him walk that fast before. Besides, Uncle Joe had a big stick in his hand, and he would hit the trees and fence and things just like he wanted to kill them. Mr. Man had just had his dinner, and was sitting out under a tree, smoking, as he always did after dinner.

"Well, Uncle Joe, you look like something is worrying you. What's the matter?"

"Matter enough," said Uncle Joe, "but what I want to know right now is whether Blackie Bear and his crowd of robbers have been over to your house."

"Blackie Bear!" said Mr. Man; "didn't you know that Blackie Bear is dead? What are you talking about, anyway.

"No I didn't know that he is dead, and you don't know it either. And what I am talking about is that Blackie Bear and his whole gang of robbers have been over to my house while I was away, and just about broke me up. That's what I am talking about.

"Nearly Killed Howler."

"And they didn't stop at taking my things; but they nearly killed my dog, Howler. The poor dog fought them as hard as he could, but he couldn't whip them all, and they beat him up so he can hardly walk. It all happened Saturday night while I was gone with Judy to see my mother."

"That's funny," said Mr. Man. "Howler and his brother stayed over here with Rover Saturday night and stayed most all day Sunday. I don't see how he got into any fight Saturday night."

"What are you talking about, Mr. Man? Do you mean to tell me that Howler left my house Saturday night and didn't go back till Sunday night?"

"I mean to tell you again just what I said—that Howler came over here right after supper Saturday night, and that he brought another dog that he said was his brother, and that they stayed until Sunday afternoon, so I can't see how he and Blackie Bear had any fight on Saturday night."

"And you say he had his brother with him?"

"That's what he said. Said his name was Hound Dog and that he was his brother. And they certainly did look alike," said Mr. Man.

"That's enough," said Uncle Joe. "Good-by."

Labor Accepts Hopewell Row Plan of Board

(Associated Press.)

Despite a defiant challenge of its authority by the Tubize-Chatillon Corporation, the Labor Board late yesterday proposed a plan to settle labor difficulties at the corporation's Hopewell, Va., rayon plant.

The board's proposal, immedately accepted by representatives of the United Textile Workers of America, was that 410 employes discharged from the plant in recent weeks be placed upon a preferential reemployment list to be prepared at once and that work at the plant be rotated and divided so reemployment would be effected rapidly.

Names would be arranged on the list according to seniority.

David A. Harrison, jr., representing the corporation, expressed unwillingness to call the Tubize-Chatillon management in an effort to adjust the plant's troubles, but agreed at the conclusion of an all-day hearing to answer the board's proposal within five days.

The Hopewell dispute, in which a strike has been threatened by the union unless its members are reinstated, came to the board on a union complaint that the corporation discharge 30 men and women during April and May because of their union activities. Within the last two weeks, the union alleged, 410 employes, 90 per cent of them union members, have been laid off.

Several of the discharged workers testified they were told by foremen or otherwise given to understand that the reason for their dismissal was union affiliation. Some of them said they had been with the company for as long as 11 years.

Psychic Bidding.

Psychic bids are going out of fashion. The pendulum which swung very strongly in their favor a few years ago has now swung almost as strongly in the other direction. This is natural enough because good psychic bidding is based upon a thorough understanding of the psychology of deception, and most Bridge players, like most other people, are not always at their best in weaving a tangled web of lies.

However, there are still psychics. It was my good fortune to witness one that went wrong the other day only because of the sheer inability of the partner to grasp what was going on.

East, Dealer.

Both sides vulnerable.

East	South	West	North
1♣	1♡(1)	2◇	Pass
3◇	3♠(2)	Dbl.(3)	3♡(4)
Dbl.	Pass	Pass	Pass

2—Now showing the real suit.

3—West decides that there is something wrong with the bidding. He decides that South has gone too far.

4—A catastrophe. Not only does North decide to rescue by returning to hearts, which perhaps was to be expected, but he rescues by making an insufficient bid, thereby barring his partner for one round.

North, required to make his bid sufficient, bid four hearts, which East doubled, and South paid the penalty for a psychic Opening and his partner's insufficient bid by going down 4,400 points. West opened the club 8, which East won with the King after the Knave had been played from Dummy. East now returned a small heart, which West won with the Ten. West returned the club 7, and when South refused to cover in the Dummy, continued with the heart 6, which East won. East cashed the Ace of clubs, upon which West discarded a spade, and continued with another club, whereupon West ruffed and led a low diamond, upon which the King was played from Dummy. The Declarer now led a spade and cashed one trick in that suit, but his effort to cash another trick was frustrated when West ruffed. West then put his partner in the lead by returning a low diamond, and East taking the trick with his Knave, drew Dummy's last two trumps and put his partner in the lead with a diamond to cash the remaining trick.

Radio Waves and Ripples

IF some of you will remember a show that ran through most of the winter as the "Seven-Star Review," it probably would help us a lot in telling about the latest C. B. S. creation, "Voice of America."

It has everything—on paper—including five orchestra conductors and the Beale Street Boys.

It has Sylvia Froos, Mary Eastman, Gertrude Niesen, Nick Lucas, Fats Waller, George Jessel, Freddie Rich, Howard Barlow, Mark Warnow, Johnny Green, a 45-piece orchestra, a five-minute dramatic sketch and J. Augustine.

We don't know who J. Augustine is, either, but the others should tell you what to expect.

It may look like a scheme to keep as much talent as possible at work during the summer, but it probably will turn out to be one of the brightest spots of the season.

Tomorrow is the day, 7:15 p. m. the time and WJSV the place.

IF you failed to hear Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars and his snakes from the reptile house of the Bronx Zoo on C. B. S. this morning, and feel you have missed something, you may heal your disappointment by listening to wild bird sounds next Saturday.

For a time it looked as though the bird broadcast would have to be called off. But Poley McClintock (Waring's Pennsylvanians) fixed that.

A. C. B. S. representative, sent to audition the birds, was met with silence, a terrible, soul-crushing silence. The birds, in other words, wouldn't talk. Then he thought of Poley, he of the frog voice, and summoned him to come to the apiary.

"So you won't talk?" croaked Poley.

There immediately ensued, we are told, a blare of squawkings that was deemed highly satisfactory.

Ninety years of changing fashions in play-making and drinking have raised "The Drunkard" from the level of melodramatic propaganda to comedy, a fit thing, therefore, for revival in the Nation's most modern theater — the American Music Hall in New York.

Happily Columbia has arranged to broadcast a portion of this burlesqued version of the famous temperance piece of the 1840's and to find in the role of narrator none other than its own Colonel Stoopnagle.

Together — the colonel and "The Drunkard"—with the assistance of the audience should give us a lively half-hour Wednesday, beginning at 10 p. m.

Johnny Green, C. B. S. musical director, is preparing a tabloid version of "Mr. Whittington," London stage hit, for American air presentation in connection with a new commercial. . . . Green wrote the score for the musical piece.

Irene Taylor, N. B. C.'s "it girl," is an inveterate magazine coupon clipper . . . she clips 'em all and sends 'em in just to see what will happen. . . . Paul Whiteman has moved to the roof of the Biltmore, whence he will be heard three times weekly over N. B. C. . . . A pretty good way to get your head knocked off is to try taking a picture of Babe Ruth before any one of his N. B. C. broadcasts. . . . Harold Yates, Capital engineer (N. B. C.), will be removed from the ranks of marriageable bachelors June 30. . . . The Marine Band moves from Tuesdays to Fridays to replace the Walter Damrosch Music Appreciation broadcasts next week. . . . Taylor Branson's musicians also have been given a full hour for their evening program on WRC, beginning June 3.

GERTRUDE NIESEN would seem to be another reason for hurrying along the development of television. She's the vibrant-voiced girl who has a regular job with the C. B. S. "Big Show," Monday night, 8:30.

Whitecaps.

District Man Invents Collapse-proof Tire

A tire with adjustable tread, claimed to be proof against skidding and collapsing when punctured, has been patented by Albert E. Dietz, of 1216 Owen place northeast.

By a lever arrangement operated from the driver's seat while the car is in motion, tire treads can be doubled in width. A tug on the lever pulls a counter-shaft roller that engages the inside of each tire, putting into play the adjustable rubber pad mechanism.

Inside the tire is a core of light metal which Dietz claims will sustain the weight of the car when the inner tube is punctured.

June Lives Up to Name For Brides

Miss Myers to Wed in Parents' Residence at Noon.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

June, the month of brides, has arrived! There are always so many weddings in this poor overworked month that at times it would seem advisable to add another day or two. But, with all of that, Washington's young, about-to-be-married couples have let the first day of June, with all of its glorious sunshine, slip by, without weddings.

Today, however, is another story. This morning, the churches, homes and clubs all over the Capital will be the scenes of much activity concerning ribbons, orange blossoms and palms, and caterers' cars are to be found parked in front of more than a few doors.

One of Washington's first June brides is Miss Persis Chase Myers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Hewitt Myers, whose wedding to Mr. John Rowland Hill, son of the late Mrs. Evelyn Lyster Hill, will take place at high noon in the lovely home of her parents on S street.

Another Wedding Today.

This afternoon at 4 o'clock the Washington Cathedral will be the scene of the wedding of Miss Doris Crampton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Crampton, to Mr. A. Leckie Cox, son of the Justice and Mrs. Joseph Cox.

At 5 o'clock Miss Martha Garner Turner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Turner, of Washington and Florida, and Mr. Herbert Harry Denham, of Florida, will be married in St. Thomas' Church. They will make their future home at Coral Gables, Fla.

The third of this year's debutantes to be married is Miss Virginia Alida Mayo, daughter of Mrs. Pendleton Mayo and Capt. Claude B. Mayo, U. S. N., of Seattle, whose wedding to Mr. William Preston Smith 3d, son of Mrs. Lucien Green, will take place at 5 o'clock in the 1925 F Street Club in the presence of members of the families and intimate friends.

Miss Hall to Marry.

Another afternoon wedding to take place is that of Miss Janet Alling Hall, daughter of the former Interstate Commerce Commissioner and Mrs. Henry Hall, who will become the bride of Mr. Oliver Burkert Lerch in the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church.

Of course, no list of weddings is quite complete without a military wedding with its colorful full dress uniforms and gleaming sabers. This evening the post Chapel at Fort Meade, Md., will be the scene of the wedding of Miss Olive Morrill Wilson, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Durward Wilson, to Lieut. Charles Austin Kengla, R. C., U. S. A., son of Mrs. Mary Kengla, of Washington

Following the ceremony there will be a dance at the Officers Club. Later, Lieut. and Mrs. Kengla will leave on their wedding trip, and upon their return will make their home at Indianhead, Md.

Mme. Sze Sails Abroad June 6

Will Be Accompanied by Her Daughter, Alice, to London.

Mme. Sze, wife of the Minister of China, accompanied by her daughter, Alice, will sail from New York, June 6, for London to join her other daughter, and son, who have been making their home in London.

The Minister will probably join them in several weeks to attend the wedding of their son, Dr. Szeming Sze, to Miss Bessie Y. Li, daughter of Li Ming, president of the Chekiang Industrial Bank of China, which will take place the latter part of the month.

Dr. Sze was educated in medicine at Cambridge University and at St. Thomas' Hospital in London. He also attended summer school at Cornell University, of which his father is an alumnus.

Miss Li is studing piano in the Royal Academy of Music in London. The wedding will probably take place in the Chinese Legation in London.

Federation Chiefs Back in Washington

Mrs. W. W. Husband, chairman of the Division of Americanization of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and Mrs. Edgar B. Meritt, General Federation director for the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs, have returned from Hot Springs, Ark., where they have been attending the sixteenth council meeting of the General Federation.

They made the trip by automobile and were accompanied by Miss Sarah Jane Brame, of Lewisville, Ark., who will be the house guest of Miss Josephine Parks, daughter of Representative Tilman B. Parks.

Mrs. Parks, who accompanied them to the council meeting, will remain in Arkansas, where she will be joined by Representative Parks following the adjournment of Congress.

Mrs. Elbert W. Shirk has come from Redland, Calif., to be the guest of Mrs. Nathan Paine at the Shoreham for several weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Paine recently returned to the Capital from New York City, and Mr. Paine has just departed on a business trip to Wisconsin.

Miller at their home on 53 East Seventieth street in New York at a cocktail party yesterday afternoon. Representative and Mrs. Britten are the guests of Mr. W. W. Miller for the week-end in his home at Lawrence, Long Island.

Sir Arthur Steel-Maitland, of London, England, had friends lunching with him yesterday at the Carlton, where he is stopping while in Washington.

Mr. Pedro Guevara, resident commissioner of the Philippines, and Mrs. Guevara entertained a party at the Madrillon dinner dance on Thursday evening.

Their guests included Mr. and Mrs. Charles Nutter, Mr. and Mrs. S. Peter Kerr, Mr. and Mrs. J. Skinner, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Sawyer, Mr. and Mrs. M. Erana, Mr. B. A. Dillamin and Mr. William Landers.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Frelinghuysen Dumont are spending several days at the Mayflower Hotel before returning to their home, The Anchorage, at Ronks, Lancaster County, Pa.

Mr. Dumont was former United States Consul General in Havana for the past four and a half years, and on April 1 he retired from the Diplomatic Service, of which he has been a member for a number of years.

Mrs. McCauley Here From California

Mrs. Edward McCauley, of California, is spending some time in Washington. Mrs. McCauley will be well remembered by many in the Capital as Miss Jean Oliver, daughter of the late Senator Oliver.

Mrs. Walden L. Ainsworth, of Panama, wife of Capt. Ainsworth, U. S. N., was the guest of honor at a dinner at the Shoreham Thursday evening, when Mr. and Mrs. William M. Escaville, jr., and Mr. and Mrs. Fred A. Carter were hosts. Others present included Mr. and Mrs. Walter Barnett, Dr. and Mrs. William B. Sims and Mr. Fred Gibbs.

Miss Paulette Guffey and Miss Ida Guffey, of Pittsburgh, sisters of Mr. Joseph Guffey, are his guests at the Mayflower while in Washington for a few days.

Mrs. Nannie Greene Jobe and her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Jobe, have issued cards for a tea on Sunday afternoon in honor of Mrs. Julien Mason, who recently returned from Manila, Philippine Islands, and Mrs. Harrison Cassard.

D. C. Woman To Be Hostess For Reunion

Mrs. Randolph Coyle Will Attend Confederate Gathering.

Col. and Mrs. Randolph Coyle, with their young son, Pat, will leave Washington Monday night for Chattanooga, Tenn., where Mrs. Coyle, chosen by Gen. Homer Atkinson, commander in chief of the United States Confederate Veterans, will be sponsor of the South for the forty-fourth reunion since the organization was started.

Col. Coyle, who bears the Confederate title of brigadier general, will act as personal aid to the commander in chief, and will be present with his wife at the various events scheduled during the reunion, which will start next Wednesday. Mrs. Coyle will act as hostess for Gen. Atkinson.

Mrs. Coyle has taken part in several of the reunions before. In 1910 she served as maid of honor for the granddaughter of Jefferson Davis, then Lucy Hayes, who was the sponsor that year for the South in Mobile, Ala. Six years later she was maid of honor for the Raphael Semmes Camp, at the reunion held in Birmingham, Ala., and the following year, 1917, she was sponsor for the same camp at the reunion held here.

These reunions are very stirring affairs, with proud rows of men in gray uniforms, many of them with white hair, whose ranks are becoming thinner each year. The full United States Marine Band will go to Chattanooga to do honor to the Civil War heroes, their presence having been made possible there through a special Congressional appropriation.

Mrs. Coyle is a native of Mobile, Ala., where she spent her girlhood. At the reunion this year Mrs. Coyle will wear a number of lovely cotton frocks especially designed for her for the occasion in deference to the cotton crop of the Southern States. Mrs. Coyle's interest in cotton found an interesting expression during the World War when, as a debutante in Mobile, she with several friends picked a field of cotton and auctioned off the 30 pounds they had gleaned for the Red Cross.

Mr. and Mrs. Rapley will return to Washington in October to remain for several weeks before going to Florida, where they will take a house for the winter. In the absence of his family, Mr. William Rapley will be at the Chevy Chase Club.

Mrs. Thomas Miller At Graduation Here

Mrs. Thomas W Miller, of Ashland, Ohio, is a guest at the Mayflower with her daughter, Miss Mary Miller, who graduated last night from Fairmont School. Mrs. Miller spent the winter and early spring at her home in St. Petersburg, Fla, and with her daughter will return to Ohio for the remainder of the month.

On July 5 Mr. and Mrs. Miller and daughter, accompanied by Miss Isabel Macneil, will sail for England, and later in the summer will go to France.

William Ramseyer, Mrs. Claude R. Porter, Mrs. Alvin Steuart Maddox, Mrs. Rollin A. Hunter, Mrs. Harold Wittle, Mrs. Herbert S. Duckworth, Mrs. Wilbur W. Marsh. Fete to Honor G.W. University Senior Class

Reception and Ball Will Be Given Tonight By Alumni.

Members of the graduating class of the George Washington University will be guests of the alumni at a reception and ball held in their honor under the auspices of the General Alumni Association tonight at the Mayflower Hotel.

In the receiving line at the reception will be the retiring president of the association, Dr. Daniel LeRay Borden and Mrs. Borden, the newly elected alumni president and his wife; the president of the university and Mrs. Cloyd H. Marvin; the provost of the university and Mrs. William Allen Wilbur, and the senior class president, Mr. Joseph Danzansky.

The program of the ball will include the presentation of two alumni awards, "to the man and the woman member of the graduating class whose loyalty has been demonstrated in terms of outstanding service to the university."

There will be a grand march of the seniors led by members of the senior council. The graduates will wear red roses, the class flower, presented by the General Alumni Association, making a colorful scene in the dance in which only seniors and their escorts will join, while other guests look on from the boxes.

Steel Gauntlet, junior honor society, will hold a "tap service" in which outstanding members of next year's senior class will be pledged to membership. University songs will be sung by an octet from the Men's Glee Club.

Preceding the reception and ball, the annual meeting of the General Alumni Association will be held in the Chinese room of the Mayflower.

Woman Still Likes Pursuit, If Pursuer Is the Right Man

By Hope Ridings Miller.

THE modern woman doesn't mind being a clinging vine if she can find a strong male to cling to. Despite her ambition to forge ahead in the world, her independence, and her interests outside the home, she is still Victorian in her desire to be pursued and won by Prince Charming.

A heroine stepping from the pages of any of Miss Bailey's 20 books would not have been a more attractive picture than was the author herself yesterday in her suite at the Willard. Graying hair framed a softly outlined round face. Heavily fringed blue eyes twinkled as she talked. A rose chiffon tea gown outlined her throat and fell in folds to her pink satin sandals.

Sitting on a divan, Miss Bailey commented on modern romantic fiction and gave hints on authorship, winnowed from her long and fruitful experiences as one of America's highest paid women writers.

Want to Be Pursued.

"In planning my novels and short stories," she said, "I keep in mind that women still enjoy reading about the pursuer-protector type of hero and the old-fashioned type of girl who waits to be pursued and who is won on conditions satisfactory to the reader.

"On the whole, my stories are optimistic. Love affairs of my characters are as beautiful as I can make them, because I believe people want golden-dream fiction. I realize my characters are rose colored and idealistic, but while I hope to strike a deeper note in my writing some day, I don't think I shall ever attempt the sordidly realistic type of novel."

Miss Bailey further believes writing—whether romantic or realistic—is not a divine art, to be pursued merely in moments of inspiration.

"I write every day from 9 in the morning until 1 in the afternoon," she said. "Sometimes I sit down at my desk without being inspired or even wanting to write, but eventually I get into the mood. Writing is a vocation for which many sacrifices must be made. One who wants to follow it as a vocation must have steadfastness of purpose, a keen imagination, a ready vocabulary and a background of good reading. He should be well grounded in the works of both the classic and the modern writers.

"He should be familiar with the works of Thackeray, George Eliot, Tolstoy, Ibsen, Barrie and Shaw—as many as he can find time to read. The poets, too, are valuable reading, for from them one will get the lovely singing words that will lift his prose above the commonplace."

Must Have a Philosophy.

Miss Bailey pointed out also that the aspiring writer must have a belief in himself—a philosophy.

"My own philosophy is that man is the captain of his soul," she explained, "and the world is largely what he makes it. Unhappiness may come, people may prove disappointing, evil may appear triumphant, but if there is something within the individual refusing to confess failure, that person will conquer in the end."

Having received thousands of letters from those who want to win literary laurels, and having talked to as many, Miss Bailey is well acquainted with problems confronting them at present. Busy as she is, however, she finds time to give encouragement to each.

"I always advise the beginner to write about things in which he is most interested," she asserted. "I suggest, too, he had better not try tragic tales if he is naturally optimistic. On the other hand, one who knows real tragedy would do well to get it into his stories if he can do so without being morbid or sensational.

"Sincerity, of course, is important to any writer—the established one as well as the beginner. One must take his work seriously if he is to succeed, but he need not take himself too seriously, nor be disappointed if he fails to achieve the heights reserved only for the genius."

Schools Seen Run to Help Instructors

Advisory Group Asserts Pupils Do Not Get Most Benefit.

NEW YORK, June 1 (Spl.).—Present day schools are run for the benefit of the teachers rather than the pupils, an advisory committee that has been studying the school needs of this State charges.

The committee consists of widely known educators. It is headed by Dr. Frank E. Spaulding, professor of education at the Yale Graduate School. It was appointed to seek economies in State school expenditures.

A system whereby tenure of office would not count so much as ability was recommended for payment of teachers. Under this plan teachers' pay would be cut to the minimum prescribed by law with bonuses up to 25 per cent above the minimum for the better teachers, regardless of their length of service.

Would Reduce Hours.

The committee also advocated reduction of pupils' school time by one-fifth. It recommended "not primarily for the sake of economy, but in the interests of the pupils" that daily recitation periods for each pupil be cut from five to four and that the length of each period in some subjects be cut from 55 to 45 minutes.

The committee attacked current "progressive" movements in education involving standardization and a "multitude of devices designed partly to attract, interest, occupy and hold pupils in school and partly to help pupils meet the requirements of the standardizing agencies."

Discusses Salaries.

Speaking of the report Dr. Spaulding said:

"At the expense of the service pupils now receive, the committee would not recommend the reduction of teaching costs by a single dollar. The committee does, however, maintain that many dollars can be saved in any school system dominated by tenure and automatic schedules, and the teaching service improved at the same time.

"What is needed is a discriminating use of salary funds, paying for the higher grades of service much more than is now generally paid and for ordinary and inferior service, much less. Discrimination in expenditures for salaries, practiced on a Nation-wide scale, would easily result in a 25 per cent improvement in teaching service without increasing total expenditures for this service by one dollar."

Lipstick, Powder Puff Aids Need Most Careful Usage

MODERN mothers are still telling their young daughters that pretty is as pretty does. But they generally add, "with the lipstick, rouge and powder puff!"

And right they are! Cupid-bow lips are frequently changed with careless dabs of color into an awkward streak of scarlet; cheeks too often blush in two round spots; and noses are forced into whitewashed prominence.

If nature was niggardly in her gift of lips, at least the cosmeticians are generous with their suggestions and means for improvment. And nowadays when man is conquering the elements with his ships of steel, and giant winged liners, 'tis no conceit in a woman to perfect nature whenever and however she can.

Can Fill Out Lips.

With lips that are too large, she can adeptly draw them smaller by not filling out the natural lines. Lips that are small and pinched can be drawn to appealing fullness by lipstick a fraction of an inch over the outline. Cupid's bows may be accentuated by a bright redness on either side of the central "V."

Cheeks that are high, cheeks that sag, cheeks that give a face a wide expanse, can all be rouged to minimize natural defects. A woman with high cheek bones should be careful to apply her tint slightly lower beneath the eyes than the woman with sagging cheeks. She should rouge so that the eye is carried upward, not downward with the sag.

A woman with a wide face should apply her rouge inward, and by no means carry it outward to the hair line unless her coiffure extends well out over her cheeks.

Careful Smoothing Needed.

In all cases rouge should be carefully smoothed on so that there is no pronounced line of demarcation where the color begins and leaves off. A soft powder brush is the best implement for the perfect blending process.

Because the majority of women begin powdering their faces at the nose, their noses are unbecomingly emphasized. If they would begin at the chin and work upward, patting the powder first, and smoothing it later, no feature would be too much in powder prominence.

Origin of Those Famous Sunday Night Parties Told in Radio Talk by Mrs. J. Borden Harriman

Suppers, Like Topsy, Just Grew, Says Capital Hostess.

The Washington Post in its "First Ladies of the Capital" interview series, conducted by the Radio Reporter over a National Broadcasting Co. network twice weekly, has kept its feminine radio listeners informed on Washington social life.

By Margaret Santry.
The Radio Reporter.

FEMININE radio listeners yesterday had a major opportunity to learn the secrets of being a brilliant hostess from one who is famed internationally for the gatherings of the great which congregate in her home. Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Washington society leader, made her first radio broadcast, over WMAL.

The distinguished social leader whose drawing room for the past twelve years has rivaled the salons of Europe for the assemblages of luminaries from all walks of life who meet there for discussion, revealed the story of how her now famous Sunday night suppers originated.

Mrs. Harriman chatted with the radio reporter in The Washington Post's "First Ladies of the Capital" interview series over WMAL and a National Broadcasting Co. Network. She was heard from coast to coast at 2 o'clock.

Suppers "Just Happened."

Mrs. Harriman: "There was really no plan about the Sunday night suppers, Miss Santry. They just happened. In the summer of 1922, a friend who was interested in politics suggested she would like to meet some of the Senators and Congressmen and newspaper men here in Washington in an informal way. So I gave a number of supper parties in the garden of my house on F street on Thursday nights.

"That autumn I went out West compaigning. When I came back people said they had missed my parties, so I decided to resume them, but this time, on Sunday nights."

Miss Santry: "And how they've become an institution!"

Mrs. Harriman: "Well, you may say that Miss Santry—but I couldn't. As I said, there was no plan—but, like Topsy, my parties just grew. And, as my friends were good enough to say they enjoyed them as much as I certainly did—and do—I continued them. If they have been a success it is because I have been fortunate enough to gather together groups of interesting people."

Differences of Opinion.

Miss Santry: "But aren't you too modest about your parties? You do not give sufficient credit to your own charming and tactful hospitality. I understand you even have warring political enemies at the same gathering and get away with it. Do they ever bring their differences into your drawing room?"

Mrs. Harriman: "Certainly they do—but they are always discussed with good temper and on a high plane. I make no distinction about inviting Democrats and Republicans to the same party. A little divergence of opinion makes for spicy conversation.

"I think that the opportunity to meet informally and unofficially, to exchange ideas and get to know people away from their official lives, is a very good thing. One or two results that have come about because people met at my house and had just that opportunity to know each other informally, have been quite gratifying.

"For instance, a well known magazine editor met a Cabinet member at my home a few weeks ago, about whom a critical article had been prepared for his magazine. He had never met this Cabinet member before, and after doing so and hearing him talk about things in general, he wired his offices and had the whole article rewritten. As a result of this meeting he got an entirely different slant on the Secretary's personality and policies."

"IF THEY HAVE BEEN a success it is because I have been fortunate enough to gather together groups of interesting people," says Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, above, telling of those Sunday night parties that have become a Washington social institution.

Handling Conversation.

Miss Santry: "After all, the success of party conversation usually depends upon the hostess. How do you manage to swing it around to those brilliant conversations your gatherings are noted for?"

Mrs. Harriman: "The conversation usually develops by chance. However, once in a while some one of my guests will ask me to ask a certain man a certain question to get things started. Soon the conversation becomes general, especially if one of the major political problems of the moment is under discussion."

For the benefit of listening hostesses, the radio reporter queried the noted hostess on the preparations for her parties and, coming from an expert, here is a pointer they may well make note of:

Mrs. Harriman does not serve a buffet supper. She seats her guests at a number of small tables in the dining room. Sometimes when the gatherings are larger the tables are placed in the large living room—or else outdoors on the adjoining porches to the house.

"I always seat my guests because men are usually tired, and they like to sit down and relax at table. I wouldn't think of making them get up and wait on themselves or any one else. I think they hate to balance plates and tea cups."

Simple Menu Is Best.

As to food, an extremely simple menu is the order of the occasion. In the winter, Irish stew is the piece de resistance, following crab meat or eggs in some form. Sometimes chicken pie is substituted for the Irish stew. Then there is a mixed green salad, with cottage cheese, and a simple dessert—like pancakes or cream puffs with hot chocolate sauce.

When we inquired how it happens that, despite her close contact with the political scene and active participation in official life, she has never run for public office, Mrs. Harriman replied that her love for Washington, where she has made her residence for 20 years and where there are no elective offices, would account for her absence from the political race.

She has served, however, in several major appointive offices, as the first woman member of the Federal Industrial Relations Commission under President Wilson, and during the war as chairman of the Committee on Women in Industry of the Council for National Defense. She also is prominent as a member of the Democratic National Committee for the District of Columbia and keenly interested in the success of President Roosevelt's Administration.

Mrs. Harriman refused to discuss the rumor concerning her possible appointment as Minister to the Irish Free State, an honor her many friends are hoping will come to her, despite the fact that the National Capital would lose to an American legation under her regime the interesting social activities that have distinguished her home in Washington.

Monday over WRC and a coast-to-coast National Broadcasting Co. network The Washington Post presents Mrs. Thomas Pryor Gore, wife of the Senator from Oklahoma, at 11:45 a. m.

Golf, Tennis, Ballooning Hold Women's Interest

HELEN HICKS is having her ups and downs in golf. Starting the season poorly, she changed clubs and picked up immediately. Not a change from brassie to niblick, but from the Rockaway Hunting Club to the Seawane Club of Long Island.

She brought off scores in local tourneys that were a credit even to a former National champion. This may tempt Miss Hicks to enter a full schedule of tournaments, though she had expected to play less golf this season.

Meeting Maureen Orcutt, however, in the recent Metropolitan Intersectional Team Matches, she was defeated.

Miss Orcutt, with her brand new nomination for New Jersey assembly woman stowed away in her pocket, took a little time off from politics and played some excellent golf in the team matches. Furthermore, she has just gained the Metropolitan championship for the fifth time, defeating the tournament medalist, Charlotte Glutting, 7 and 6.

The top flight of women's tennis, now abroad, and ambitious competitors at home, are entering upon a strenuous training period. Local tennis is girding its loins for the summer. Sectional tournaments will begin this week.

The Wightman Cup players, led by Helen Jacobs, have made a good showing in the French hard-court championships, though Miss Jacobs has outlasted her team mates to the finals. The collapse of Alice Marble, seeded second, during a match, however, and the discovery that she was running a high fever, throws her fitness in question and casts a shadow over our certainty of retaining the cup in the Wightman matches in two weeks. Miss Jacobs and Sarah Palfrey, warned by the mishap and the strain of playing in the severe heat, scratched from the French mixed doubles.

Mrs. Jeannette Piccard, wife of Prof. Piccard, of stratosphere fame, is taking on something that may be sport to her but sounds suspiciously like adventure. She intends to be the first woman to pilot a balloon into the stratosphere this summer, while her husband accompanies her and makes scientific observations.

Lacrosse matches are being played between local clubs, with controversy still raging as to dangerousness. School and college lacrosse is drawing to a close.

Team games are on the wane.

White Prevails In Furniture For Outdoors

Chairs Are Intricately Designed and Tables Are of Tubing.

WITH the return of long summer days and late afternoon leisure there comes a renewed interest in out-of-door furniture.

White is definitely the prevailing note in the color scheme with occasional accent of brilliant tropical colors. Iron, wood, reed, wire, and rattan all bring new ideas and variation into garden furniture.

Victorian vogue is evident in an amusing white wire group. The chairs are intricately designed in loops and spirals, some with cushioned seats of cherry red permatex, others having resilient white steel slats. A graceful white iron tea table included in the group has a clear glass top—so cool and inviting on a hot day. Any number of pieces from benches to bird cages come in harmonizing white wire whirls and curlicues.

A chaise longue of white rattan, adapted from the Chinese Chippendale, is cushioned in delphinium blue suede cloth with bindings of white. The table is of white wood with rattan bindings in the same patterns as the chaise longue. The third piece in this group is a rattan [illegible] gay red, white and blue plaid gingham.

Then for the [illegible] vogue . . . Luxuriously comfortable lounging chairs of steel and chromium tubing add cachet to the smart modern terrace. They are upholstered in rough, nubby linen in a diagonal weave and are patterned in large brown and beige checks. The chairs are of the round-about type which can be used individually or can be [illegible] together in group to form a sofa. With these are used small round tables for glasses and smoking accessories. The tables are of metal tubing with attractive mirror tops.

HELEN HICKS SAID EARLY this season she was only going to compete in an occasional tournament and let the rest of the cups go by. Recent events, however, may tempt her to change her mind.

"Lazy" Climate Of South Seen Aid to Writers

T. S. Stribling Asserts He Does Most Work When Sleepy.

NEW YORK, June 1 (Spl.).—The "lazy" Southern climate is responsible for the "literary renaissance" in the South, according to T. S. Stribling, whose novel was a Pulitzer Prize winner.

The climate in the South makes one sleepy and when he is in that state his subconscious does much of his work for him, Mr. Stribling declares.

When Mr. Stribling starts on a new book he takes to the woods with copy paper and pencils under his arm. He usually starts about 3 in the morning, and writes in the woods until he falls asleep. When he wakes up he writes until sleep overtakes him again. It was in this fashion that his new novel, "Unfinished Cathedral," was written in four months.

"I average about a chapter or a chapter and a half a day," he said. "When I finish a novel in longhand I have a manuscript more than a foot high. Then I start copying it off on the typewriter. I only copy what interests me. If I come to a long harangue about something that interested me when I wrote it, but which no longer holds my attention, I either cut it down to a line or so if it is important to the story or throw it away altogether. I throw away about a third of each manuscript."

Mr. Stribling plans each detail of his books before he writes a line. "A novel runs in waves of climax," he explained. "You can give the most important part of a novel in a few sentences. I make records of incidents I want to use to build up to climaxes on index cards. Then I fasten these cards on a great board ten feet square. Then I study them over, put this incident next to that in workman-like order. When I have finished the work on the board the plan is clear in my mind and all that is left to be done is the actual writing."

Mr. Stribling has been writing steadily for more than 20 years. During most of that time he made his living writing for pulp magazines.

"Catholic Action in the U. S." Topic at Alumnae Banquet

Miss Anne Sarachon Hooley, President of National Women's Organization, To Speak Tonight at Trinity College Event.

MISS ANNE SARACHON HOOLEY, president, National Council of Catholic Women, will be the principal speaker at the Trinity College Alumnae banquet at 7:30 o'clock tonight, at the college. Her subject will be "Catholic Action in the United States."

Miss Hooley, a resident of Kansas City, Mo., received her A. B. degree from Trinity. She has long been prominent in Catholic women's activities. Her work with the Amberg Club, which devotes its energies toward the betterment of conditions of the foreign-born in Kansas City, was the beginning of her Catholic activities.

Elected to the board of directors of the National Council of Catholic Women in 1928, she served as treasurer for the year 1930-1931 and as secretary 1931-1934. At the convention of the board October 11, 1933 in St. Paul, Minn., she was elected National president.

Since her election to the presidency, Miss Hooley has made speeches throughout the country. Outside of the Catholic field, she has taken an active part in the program of the Kansas City Women's Chamber of Commerce, the council of Girl Scouts, and the American Association of University Women.

4. Correct this sentence: "She eats just enough so that she keeps alive."
5. Is this correct: "How much do you make a week?"
6. Explain: "The marriage was dissolved when she was awarded a decree by default." —News item.

Then the Answers.

1. Since Bacardi is a Cuban name, the Cuban pronunciation, ba-car-DEE, is technically the only correct one, though in the United States ba-CAR-di is more frequently heard.
2. Pronounced: Tro; any of various kinds of barges and smacks. The verb, meaning to believe, is obsolete.
3. Emigration—the leaving of one's country to settle in another; immigration—arriving in a new country as a settler from another.
4. Should be: "She eats just enough to keep her alive." The combination, enough so that, is incorrect.
5. Make is here used incorrectly for earn.
6. A decree awarded when either the defendant or the plaintiff fails to appear at the required time to defend or prosecute an action.

Child's Character Is Fixed At Age of 6, Author Asserts

IS a child's character determined by the age of six years?

This question, which has been widely debated by psychologists and educators, is answered in the affirmative by Dorothy Canfield Fisher, fiction writer and author of several books on child psychology, in a recent short story, "Forgotten Mother."

The story has been selected by the editors of The Delineator as the most outstanding in their best story edition for June.

The theme of the story is that fundamental lessons learned in childhood influence all later actions. The story centers about a middle-aged and successful physician and his memories of his mother.

Remembrances Develop.

The physician's mother had died when he was 5 years old and he retained only a dim mental picture of her. But two remembrances of her became more distinct as he grew older. One was about the fear of a hawk; the other, an attempt to walk a crossbeam.

A city child, he had been taken to the country for the first time. Playing with older children he heard a man say something about shooting a hawk. The bird suddenly became to him the personification of all the terror in the world. He screamed helplessly, then a horrible choking fear clutched him. Relatives came rushing toward the bewildered child. His aunt recommended spanking. But his mother took him away and sat quietly with him in the bright sunlight. Lying beside her, the child sobbed violently, but even as his sobs tore through his throat, the knowledge grew upon him that presently he would sob all fear out of his heart and never again would he know terror.

Learned Value of Effort.

The other remembrance had to do with walking a crossbeam. He had started to walk the beam one morning for fun and had screamed with rage when he found he could not. His mother smiled and advised him to try again. All day he worked trying to walk along the beam and when at the close of the afternoon he triumphed, he knew his mother was proud of him, and that by trying hard enough one could surmount all obstacles.

Though these incidents occurred before the physican was 5 years old they were the most vivid memories of his childhood. And citizens of the town where he pursued his career as a physician always said it was his absolute lack of fear and his stubborn refusal to give up even in the face of death that caused him to be such a successful beloved doctor.

Vacationers Find Special Seaside Needs

Sunburn Lotion, Lipstick, Other Conveniences Made Handy.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

SUMMER sunners and swimmers will have all the conveniences required for a perfect day at the beach if they carry along one of the new overnight or week-end kits.

These were designed with an eye toward attending to their special needs while the sun beams down from overhead, the waves ripple at their feet, and the sea breeze plays tag with their parasol hats.

The kits are made of a sturdy wood and covered with water-proof linen fabrikoid in either sea green or sand beige. They contain a sunburn lotion that absorbs quickly into the skin and produces a smooth, even tan; a bottle of eau de cologne for eliminating sea stickiness, and replacing a salty odor with a refreshing fragrance; a lipstick, compact, comb and a package of cleansing tissues. Convenient pockets on either side of a mirror inserted in the top will hold sun glasses and other odds and ends.

To make it doubly complete, there's a dependable lighter and space for two packages of cigarettes.

Last Day for Sale.

This is the last day of a sale that has sent the prices of a variety of merchandise tumbling from high to low.

Summer jewelry now 25 cents will be considerably more on Monday. There are necklaces, bracelets, clips, pins for morning afternoon and night, in red, blue, green, yellow, and many combinations.

An assortment of novelty hats is going for $3. Shoes which year in and year out sell for $5 are now $3.95. White doeskin gloves, regularly $1.95, are now $1.65. A splendid quality of white fabrics are 79 cents.

White coats in the sporty basket weaves are real bargains at $10.95. Their finished tailoring places them in the ranks of high-grade coats.

Weather Bureau.

A Connecticut avenue shop has a sort of unintentional weather bureau. Fair or foul is registered there by the old clipper ship weather glass, a true reproduction of the old glasses used by the first Cape Cod Clipper ship captains who were successful in crossing the ocean after the landing of the Pilgrims.

First usage of this type barometer was recorded in 1654. For many years thereafter they were regarded as reliable means for seafaring men to forecast storms hours ahead.

A sudden increase of temperature will cause water in the strange looking blown glass bulb to rise one to two inches. A constant slow rise of the water to top of the spout means a storm pending eight to twenty hours ahead. As the storm approaches the spout will throw off water bubbles.

Triple Cosmetics Treat.

A triple treat in a cosmetics way is the offer of three creams (two little jars and a big one) for one dollar. There's a finishing cream, a cleansing cream, and a rather remarkable night cream. Remarkable because it is made up of a tissue cream, muscle oil and eye cream.

These preparations are attractively inclosed in odd shaped jet black jars, that give an air of distinction to a woman's dressing table. The European gentleman who sponsors them has for so many years sold his products to women who could and did afford the very best for their boudoir that common demand led him to this attractive form of containers.

Easy Way to See Fashions.

That vexatious question of "What shall we do to-night" receives an emphatic answer from a local shop which says, "Come on out to a local amusement park this evening and see our free style show." They urge their invitation with a "Kill two birds at one shot! Come out and ride the roller coaster, and in between times stop by and see what the beach styles were twenty years ago. Stay a little longer and we'll give you an eye full of what they are to-day."

Sure enough they're going to have 25 beauties to parade in the utterly ridiculous of yesteryear, and in up-to-date, 1934 models. There will be rubber suits, acetate, gingham, and jersey—everything in fact but celophane. Capes, caps, slacks, umbrellas, slippers, bags, in all the newest designs will be there to keep one posted on what is newest and best in beach outfits, from the smallest detail to the largest.

Good Brushes Available.

Shoppers who have done any amount of looking around for good, stiff hair brushes know they are hard to find at prices that won't bulge the budget. As a consequence they will welcome a June sale that puts 85-cent tags on brushes in a downtown store.

Utility brushes, including the tooth variety and the clothes brush, too, are down to 38 cents. They are special buys with their decorative pastel handles in pearl effect.

Ring-Around Dishes Get Call at Festive Dinners

Noodles, Salad, Macaroni, Rice and Even Spinach Found Excellent for Use in This Manner of Serving. Needs Careful Attention.

By Ann Barrett.

MAKE it in a ring when you want a dish to be festive seems to be the rule. Noodles in a ring with creamed chicken and mushrooms for the family of A. E. Carter, congressional representative from California. Salad ring for Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, minister to Denmark.

Then there's macaroni ring, rice ring, and even spinach ring. Practically anything can be made in a ring if you know the tricks. In the case of starchy ingredients such as noodles, macaroni and rice, the chief points to remember are: Do not rinse these ingredients after cooking. Pack them into buttered ring tightly, and let stand at least 5 minutes in boiling water. A 9-inch ring is best for main dishes such as noodles and chicken. But a 7-inch ring is large enough for secondary dishes such as salads and desserts. For further details, here's the recipe for noodle ring—a grand dish for a bridge luncheon, if there ever was one.

Noodle Ring.

First cook 3 cups noodles with 1 tablespoon salt in 3 quarts of boiling water. Drain, but do not rinse, and pack firmly in 9-inch ring (well-buttered first). Keep hot by standing ring in boiling water. Then melt 1-3 cup butter (or chicken fat) in pan, and gently cook 1 cup sliced mushrooms in it for 5 minutes. Next blend in ¼ cup flour, and slowly stir in ¾ cup rich milk and ¾ cup chicken stock (or all milk). Cook (stirring constantly) till sauce thickens. Then add 2 cups cubed, cooked chicken, ½ teaspoon salt and 1-8 teaspoon pepper. (If you like nutmeg, 1-8 teaspoon of this is very good.) When the chicken has heated through, add ½ cup cream. Finally, unmold the noodle ring on a chop plate, turn creamed chicken into center, and garnish with parsley.

One of the most popular of all salad rings is the tomato-jelly and cream-cheese ring. (Red, white and green—very pretty.) This starts with 3 cups canned tomato, 2 tablespoons grated onion, 2 tablespoons sliced celery, 2 whole cloves and ¼-inch piece of bayleaf. Cook these ingredients 15 minutes. Then strain to get 1 and 2-3 cups of juice. Add to this 1 tablespoon unflavored gelatin that has first been soaked in 3 tablespoons cold water. Add 2 tablespoons lemon juice or vinegar; and turn the mixture into a 7-inch mold that has first been rinsed in cold water.

When ready to serve, unmold the ring on a bed of lettuce. In the center, heap 2 cups of minced celery (first mixed with ½ cup mayonnaise). Make ¾ cup of cottage cheese into little balls, arrange these around the outside of the tomato ring, and sprinkle the cheese balls with chopped chive or green onion top.

Mrs. Sheets Awarded First Recipe Prize

Sweatered Dogs Ranked as Winning Picnic Suggestion.

THIS week's recipe prizes were awarded for their simplicity, practicability and adaptability for summer picnics. Several excellent suggestions were regretfully elminated because they might be difficult to prepare and serve.

First prize, $3, was awarded to Mrs. H. A. Sheets, R. F. D. No. 1, box 56, Woodstock, Va.

Third prize, $1, was awarded Mrs. A. Turner Cox, 1327 D street northeast.

Mrs. Louis Crow, Fernwood Apartments, 1458 Columbia road northwest, and Mrs. D. B. Zimmer, 3261 K street northwest, received honorable mention. Mrs. Crow submitted interesting picnic menus, but since the contest was for recipes, and those contained in her menus were somewhat complicated, they had to be omitted from the final prize-winning group.

The winning recipes follow in order:

Sweatered Dogs.

Select short thick frankfurters. After parboiling cut each in two, lengthwise. Spread the cut surfaces with either prepared mustard or grated horseradish. Put together again and wrap each frankfurter with a strip of bacon. Fasten with toothpicks. Cook in a frying pan until the bacon is crisp and brown.

These should be prepared at home so that one needs only to fry them just before serving.

• • • •

Favorite Picnic Sandwich.

1 cup cottage cheese
1 tablespoon mayonnaise
¼ pound thinly sliced dried beef
1 tablespoonful finely minced chives or tender green onion tips
Salt, pepper, paprika, to taste
Sliced bread, white or rye
1 tablespoonful butter

Work butter into creamy softness, sparingly butter full slices of bread. Do not trim crusts. Mix other ingredients together and spread on bread. Put together with two layers of dried beef between. Wrap each sandwich in waxed paper, pack in covered tin box, laying over them a napkin which has been wrung out of ice water and whipped in the air several time to rid of excess moisture. Serve with chilled whole tomatoes. This recipe makes six sandwiches.

• • • •

Campfire Dish.

12 hard or soft rolls
12 eggs
1 large onion (preferably Bermuda)

Butter rolls, scramble eggs and place on rolls direct from fire, then slice rings of onion over eggs.

Serve a gelatine raw vegetable salad, Spanish rice and coffee served with these scrambled egg sandwiches. The salad and rice may be prepared at home, and the coffee taken in thermos bottles, if desired.

The recipes receiving honorable mention in this and last week's contest will appear on the Household Page of The Post of Sunday, June 10. Others will be printed in Miss Mill's daily column.

The Talking Sparrow Murders

BY DARWIN TEILHET

The Story So Far.

It was called the Talking Sparrow Murder because the big industrialist, Kohlmann, just before he was shot in a Heidelberg street, had accosted Tatson, an American engineer, and said he heard a sparrow on the pavement talking. Tatson, under suspicion, was forbidden to leave Heidelberg. Carlson, connected with the same German factory as Tatson, offered to help him escape, but Tatson wished to take with him a fascinating but mysterious singing girl named Mischa. Following her suspicious disappearance from the Dolphin Inn after Taubek, Nazi leader, had been murdered there, Mischa appeared suddenly in Tatson's pension. Under suspicion for these murders were Geigen, fiance of Elaine Edrich, and a prospective buyer of the factory; Elaine Edrich, ward of Kohlmann and recently blackmailed by Taubek; the mysterious La Roc, with his voluminous mail from Paris brokers; Kohlmann's son, Walther, mysteriously missing since his father's murder, and the murdered plant accountant, Spalger, whose death had revealed that factory funds were missing.

Now let Tatson himself go on with the story:

MISCHA sat upon my desk.

"All right" I said. "You came here, you told my landlady you were enrolled for the university's spring semester and got rooms across the hall. What next?"

"You had given me your address here. It was the only place I knew to go to. Besides, I thought it'd be the safest. Aren't you glad to see me?"

Her eyes followed me as I opened a box of cigarettes. "I'd rather see you across the border. You know what's happened, don't you? Geigen saw you run out of the inn."

"He said he saw me?"

"No, he didn't give your name. Have a cigarette? They're American. I'd already told Kresch you were at the inn so now Kresch is searching high and low for you. He thinks either you or Geigen are responsible for the murders at the inn—you know about them? You didn't happen to kill Taubek did you? Not that I'd blame you. Light?"

"Don't act so damned casual. I didn't kill him. Taubek walked into my room an hour and a half or so after you'd gone——"

"Then Kresch guessed right. The innkeeper must have telephoned after I left."

"Kresch thought that, too? Well, I tried to get away. Taubek wouldn't let me. He was pretty nasty. There were about ten minutes of that when some one knocked and asked for Herr Taubek."

"Geigen?"

"How should I know? Taubek pushed me into the other room, told me to keep still and shut the door."

Never Heard Him.

"I mean—was it Geigen's voice?"

"How would I know"

"There now—you can trust me."

"I am. Why do you think I came here?"

"But the devil! You never heard Geigen's voice"

"No."

"All right," I said to Geigen's mistress, "You never heard Geigen speak. All right, what next?"

"Some one entered the room. Then everything happened so suddenly. There was a shot. Perhaps a minute later, two more shots came up from below. I waited for a long while; no one came and I opened the door. Taubek was on the bed. I stuffed my clothes in my bag, ran downstairs——"

"Taking the letters I'd hidden, I suppose?"

"No, you seemed to think they were important, so I was afraid to take them with me—I wasn't going to tell you—I put them in back of the picture over my bed. Then I came downstairs and a man was coming up the path."

I walked over to the leather chair by my desk. "Geigen?"

"I don't know who it was," she replied crossly. "It might have been the crown prince, for all I know. I ran past him. Trampled through the fields all morning and part of the afternoon to Bruhle, became panicky and took the 6 o'clock train here." She grinned ruefully. "If Kresch finds me and with a Nazi judge——" She blew a puff of smoke upward.

Job Seems Lost.

"We're both in the same mess, aren't we?"

"They don't think you killed anyone."

"How about Spalger? Besides, how do I know what they think? I only know I'm going to lose my job. There's not a chance for this to clear up before next Tuesday."

"That's the tenth?"

"That's the tenth, Mischa. Sit down here in this chair. It's more comfortable."

She dropped into it. I leaned on the arm of her chair and ran my fingers through the soft tangle of hair. She moved her head irritably.

"What's the matter?"

"I try to think and you push my hair in my eyes and ask what's the matter. Please sit over there," she indicated a chair at least three yards away from her own. I dropped morosely into the chair.

"How did you happen to know my name?"

She pointed to my gray felt hat hanging on the back of the door. "I wore that, you'll remember. And you took it off in the inn before you went out to put my car in back. Have you ever looked inside your hat?"

"Several times."

"It won't hurt to do it again."

I got up and took my hat. Inside, punched in the band, was: "William Tatson, Gaisberg-strasse 53-Heidelberg."

"So that's how you knew? And I thought it was a mystery. But here—how did you happen to pronounce it correctly? All the Germans say 'Tat-zohn.'"

"All?" she asked with a peculiar inflection.

Heard Name Once.

"Nearly. Elaine Edrich and her friends that I know—they say 'Tatson' because I explained it to Elaine."

"I heard Herr Taubek mention your name in the Swimming Stone. He pronounced it correctly."

"Am I?"

"Just because Elaine used to see Taubek doesn't mean that she mentioned my name to him. Doesn't imply she's in this mess at all."

"Of course not," Mischa said pleasantly. "Why discuss it?"

"If you want to know, the Mercedes belongs to Taubek. He loaned it to me three months ago. My contract at the Swimming Stone includes transportation. When Taubek learned I could drive a car he offered me one of his four. Now I wish I hadn't taken it. But it doesn't make any difference." She looked at me.

"What I'd like to know is, who shot Taubek. If Geigen did—why did he do it? How did he learn Taubek was at the inn?"

How Did He Know?

"I don't know, Mischa. Here's another thing. I forgot to tell you. I opened one of Taubek's letters. It was a note from Spalger to meet him Saturday in the Friedrichspark. That was March 31."

"The day—we met?"

"The same day Spalger was killed. Taubek didn't know Spalger was waiting, did he? You didn't collect the letters; Taubek didn't receive Spalger's note."

"Yes, but Taubek walked in the park every day he could for exercise." Then she said: "Has Herr Kohlmann's house been searched?"

"I suppose so."

"But thoroughly? Don't you see there must have been some tremendously important reason to make him walk down the Plockenstrasse alone? It might have been a telephone message. If it was, then we won't ever know what it was. In these times when no one knows whether the Nazis are listening in, and if the message was urgent and secret, couldn't it have been a written note?"

"I'll ask Kresch tomorrow morning. I'm sorry if I was cross tonight, Mischa."

"You're sweet," she said, kissed my chin quickly and whisked out of the room, which, when you consider everything, was rather a surprising thing for her to do and say.

Don't miss Sunday's installment of "The Talking Sparrow Murders," which presents the last clews to the mystery. The date by which solutions must be submitted in the $300 prize contest also will be announced at that time.

What Today Means

"Gemini."

If June 2 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 11:30 a. m., from 12.30 to 2.30 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 3:30 to 5:30 p. m. and from 10:30 p. m. until midnight.

June 2 morning will be a very busy one for the "go-getter" type of business man, and some of the results will prove gratifying. The afternoon will produce far better, more satisfactory, as well as enjoyable conclusions, if spent with your family or friends in some form of social relaxation, with business affairs forgotten for the time being. The only danger to guard against is being tempted to forget overindulgence in anything which usually brings unhappy results, so practice moderation throughout the day.

If a woman and June 2 is your birthday, it should prove a very joyous one for you. Your bright mental reactions to life's realities, and the cheerful manner in which you can face difficult situations will enable you to succeed where the pessimist would fail. Never allow anything, or anyone, to cause you to lose the optimistic faith that is inherently yours, for it is this fortunate characteristic that will help you achieve success. Avoid intimacy with anyone who delights in regaling others with scandalous bits of gossip, for it is a pernicious habit, easily acquired by close association. Marriage is the logical state for you. Your financial affairs may very shortly become adjusted in a surprisingly pleasing manner. You will always have your own way where love is involved.

The child born on June 2 will grow up blessed with a happy disposition, and the ability to throw aside worries. Its jovial, carefree character will assure its popularity. It may be advisable to make it realize the importance of recognizing certain responsibilities that no one has a right to shirk. This, however, can only be done at the time and when the occasion arises that justifies something being said regarding a particular subject. It might be advisable to educate this child in a manner which will be preparatory for a professional career, if when it grows older, it displays an interest in some one particular subject, and shows signs of having the essential qualifications required for success.

If a man and June 2 is your birthday, you have the ability to make money, but to be successful it is essential you also learn how to spend discreetly, and save wisely. You are very susceptible to the fair sex and flattery, and if you do not allow either to sway your business judgment or common sense, your advancement is a foregone conclusion. June 2 is a good day to keep in mind the motto: "Discretion is the better part of valor."

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Agranulocytic Angina.

It appears probable that two important discoveries have been made as to the disease which some people know as agranulocytic angina. The name is not a good one, and it is no wonder that there is effort to get a name more easy to pronounce and write and that will stick better in the memory.

It was 12 years ago that a physician described what was called a new disease. Many physicians had seen a case or two that had the symptoms given, but no one had stated a clear-cut description of it in writing. Probably instead of its being a single disease there is a small group of disorders, some definite enough to be called separate diseases and some properly stages in other diseases in which there is a very great decrease in the number of white corpuscles in the blood.

In the one known as agranulocytic angina there is a sharp marked drop in leucocytes, sore throat, great weakness and usually rapid progress toward a fatal issue. In recent years there has been a great increase in this disease.

Of the two discoveries one relates to a cause and a suggested method of prevention and the other to a remedy or two. About a year ago Dr. Watkins reported to the Mayo staff that he had observed that this disorder was apt to develop among people who took sleeping medicines. Those medicines which were most under suspicion were the various barbiturates, and especially when these were taken in combination with amidopyrine. Later on there were confirmations of these suspicions by physicians in various parts of America and in England. The method of prevention this observation suggests is that sleeping medicines be not used.

The second discovery relates to remedies to be used. The one that has been most reported on is pentosetose neuclotide. This was proposed by Drs. Jackson, Parker and Taylor. They reported 69 cases of agranulacytic angina treated with this drug, and of these 50 are recovered. This disease is generally considered incurable. This drug is on the market. Physicians can get it through drug stores.

The second method of treatment is the use of yellow bone marrow. The immediate cause of the drop in white blood corpuscles is either a failure of bone marrow to manufacture the cells or else a failure to discharge the new cells into the blood stream.

Laura Ingalls Urges Proper Flying Dress

St. Louis, June 1 (AP).—New fashions in dress for women pilots—the kind that resembles swanky riding outfits—are "absurd" to Laura Ingalls, maker of flying records, who hasn't changed from her student-day style of dress.

Massanutten Cadets' Hearts Beat Faster as They Receive Commissions

Baltimore, June 1 (Spl.).—Political leaders today predicted a "fight to the finish" between Gov. Ritchie and Mayor Jackson, as the ninth Maryland county withdrew its Democratic forces from the expected conflict to indorse George L. Radcliffe as a compromise candidate.

The counties indorsing Radcliffe, seven of which are on the Eastern Shore, include Kent, Talbot, Queen Annes, Dorchester, Wicomico, Worcester, Somerset and Harford, and St. Marys, on the Western Shore.

It has been generally expected that Jackson would sooner or later withdraw from his race for the governorship and back Ritchie for a fifth term.

But with the proposal of Senator Millard E. Tydings that George L. Radcliffe, PWA official and close friend of Roosevelt, be a compromise candidate in the September primaries, party leaders could see only a "death struggle" between Ritchie and Jackson.

Too Far to Withdraw.

The Democratic "compromise candidate," however, may prove only a political dream. Radcliffe, returning yesterday from a trip to New York, refused to talk concerning his possible candidacy.

The fact that he was indorsed by the Eastern Shore counties was attributed to the shore's opposition to Gov. Ritchie and Baltimore City in general—an outgrowth of last fall's lynching trouble at Princess Anne.

State Senator J. Allan Coad, of St. Mary's County, who spoke before the Calumet Democratic Club, here, last night, strongly hinted that the suggested compromise candidacy had failed.

Attacks Ritchie Regime.

He spoke for two hours, devoting most of his talk to a bitter attack upon Gov. Ritchie and his administration. He denied that Maryland had good government during the 15 years of the Ritchie regime, and decried the building up of the Ritchie political machine.

Ritchie and Jackson, the State senator said, are the two principal figures in an "impending, old-time, stiff-backed primary fight, of which Maryland Democracy just now seems in need."

Such a primary, he asserted, might develop some of the courage and fighting spirit that the Democratic party once possessed.

Maryland Park Plan Weighed

Establishment of Chain of Recreation Areas Proposed.

Baltimore, June 1 (Spl.).—Establishment of a chain of recreation areas in Maryland, ranging from roadside picnic grounds to parks where families can spend vacations without charge, was discussed here today by the State planning commission.

The plan was advanced by Dr. Thomas B. Symons, director of the University of Maryland extension bureau.

How the project would be financed, and where the parks would be located, has not been decided. Chairman Abel Wolman of the planning commission appointed the following committee to study the plan:

Harry D. Williams, chief engineer of the State Roads Commission, chairman; Miss Lavinia Engle, of Montgomery County, secretary; Swepson Earle, State conservation commissioner; F. W. Besley, State forester; Francis Dryden, civil works engineer for the State, and Dr. Symons.

Reorganization Planned.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 1 (Spl.).—Col. B. D. Gibson has called a meeting of sons and grandsons of Confederate veterans for June 5 at 8 p. m. in the county courtroom to formulate plans for reorganization of the Sons of Confederate Veterans.

County Colors To Be Massed At St. Marys

Original 11 Jurisdictions Were Assigned Flags in 1695.

Baltimore, June 1 (Spl.).—For the first time in the history of Maryland the colors of the original 11 counties of the State will be massed at the tercentenary pageant at St. Mary's City June 15 and 16, it was announced today by the tercentenary committee.

Each county, under a decree of Gov. Nicholson in 1695, was authorized to fly a flag of distinctive color. These flags, usually displayed by the county militia, are as follows:

Kent, blue; St. Marys, red; Anne Arundel, white; Calvert, yellow; Charles, bronze; Baltimore, green; Talbot, purple; Somerset, the Union Jack, it being Maryland's only county fronting on the ocean; Dorchester, buff, and Cecil, crimson.

As now planned, the stands of colors will be either at the two sides of the pageant stage, or in the center. For more than 150 years the colors have been rarely shown—in fact, most residents of Maryland never knew that their counties had distinctive colors.

According to Mrs. Kathleen Read Koontz, of Washington, director, approximately 1,100 persons will take part in the pageant. Most are from St. Marys County, but all parts of the State will be represented.

They will be costumed in historic garb, representing Indians, early settlers, lords and ladies of Maryland manors, folk dancers, and just plain citizens. Their words will be carried to the spectators by amplifers.

The stage from which they will speak will have entrances and exits close to the river shore, concealed by natural foliage.

Fifty acres have been set aside near the pageant field as parking space. Troops of the Maryland National Guard will be camped on a meadow close to the field. About 1,200 soldiers will be at the scene, as well as two military bands.

Today Mrs. Edward Shoemaker and Miss Elizabeth Chew Williams, of Baltimore, members of the furnishings committee of the tercentenary commission, went to St. Marys City to review work on the State House reproduction, which their committee is to furnish. They also will study the location of the "Freedom of Conscience" statue which will be dedicated at the festival.

Tent to Return Reunion Color At University

Alumni of More Than 50 Years' Standing Will Attend June 9.

Charlottesville, Va., June 1 (Spl.).—J. Malcolm Luck, executive secretary of the University of Virginia Alumni Association, is making exhaustive efforts to bring back the old-time color and enthusiasm for this year's annual alumni reunion, to be held in connection with graduating exercises June 9, 10, 11 and 12.

The feature of the festivities will be the return of the "Big Tent." In former years, much of the reunion activity was centered in a large tent erected near the old law building, and Mr. Luck has arranged to set a huge awning on the "nineteenth" green of the university golf course.

Graduates of more than 50 years' standing are expected to return for business meetings and social functions scheduled for the alumni group.

The annual general meeting and election of officers will be held Monday, June 11. The report of the secretary will be heard and President John Lloyd Newcomb will make his annual address to the alumni. Ten new members are to be elected to the governing body of the association. Those nominated are:

John S. Battle, of Charlottesville; Maitland Hunt Bustard, of Danville, Va.; Whitwell Wentworth Coxe, of Roanoke, Va.; Dr. John Staige Davis, of New York City; Julien H. Hill, of Richmond, Va.; Prof. Frederick Deane Goodwin Ribble, of the law faculty of the university; Oscar Wilder Underwood, of Washington, and Michael Benjamin Wagenheim, of Norfolk, Va.

Five alumni have been nominated for election at the annual meeting to the Alumni Fund Council. They are:

Gardiner L. Boothe, of Alexandria, Va.; Prof. Armistead M. Dobie, dean of the law school; Theodore S. Garnett, of Norfolk, Va.; Samuel B. McPheeters, of St. Louis, Mo., and Buford Scott, of Richmond, Va.

Social events include class dinners, barbecues and smokers in the "Big Tent" and a luncheon with the graduating class. E. Leland Taylor, of Louisville, Ky., is scheduled to make the annual alumni address to the new graduates at the luncheon.

Virginian Seeks Sultan's Gold

Files for Receivers to Estate Corporations Formed to Control Huge Fortune of Former Turkish Ruler; Claims $10,000,000 Share.

Richmond, June 1 (Spl.).—Claiming a $10,000,000 interest in the vast estates of the late Abdul Hamid Han II, Sultan of Turkey, John De Kay, a citizen of Loudoun County, has filed in the city circuit court asking appointment of receivers for the Sultan Abdul Hamid Estates, Inc., and the Ottoman Imperial Estates, Inc.

Almost simultaneously with De-Kay's action, local attorneys paid the State corporation commission $5,287.49 to cover the back taxes of the Ottoman Imperial Estates, Inc., which, with the Sultan Abdul Hamid Estates, Inc., was incorporated in Virginia.

More than 9,000,000 acres of fabulously rich oil and mining lands, towns and villages in Mesopotamia, Syria, Palestine, Greece and Tripoli, comprising the estate of the late Sultan Abdul Hamid Han, are involved in the complaints filed in the court by DeKay's attorneys, Hill, Montague & Son.

Heirs Organized Corporation.

According to DeKay, when Abdul Hamid died in 1918 his heirs entered into contracts providing for the organization of the Virginia Corporations, the Abdul Hamid Estates, Inc., and the Ottoman Imperial Estates, Inc.

The Sultan Abdul Hamid Estates, Inc., was incorporated in 1922, with a maximum capital stock limited to $150,000,000 in shares of $100 each.

The Ottoman Imperial Estates, Inc., was given $106,000,000 of the $150,000,000 capital stock and the heirs of the Sultan received the remaining $44,000,000 of capital stock.

DeKay declares that he was issued 33,000 shares of the Virginia stock of the Ottoman Imperial Estates, Inc., on which he was to receive 75 per cent of the dividend until dividends should total $10,000,000. He received the stock as per contract, but has received no money, he said.

Had Advanced Money.

He has advanced the Sultan Abdul Hamid estates a total of $25,000 from time to time, and the Ottoman Imperial Estates owe him $75,000 for money advanced for which he has received no return, he declares.

Geddes H. Winston, of Richmond, was appointed statutory agent for the Sultan Abdul Hamil Estates, Inc., whose charter was annulled in 1929 for failure to pay State taxes. All of the directors, residents of New York, have resigned with the exception of one, he states.

The Ottoman Imperial Estates, whose stock was placed at $5,000,000, according to DeKay, owns stock in corporations that control the Ottoman empire, and these corporations include the entire stock of the Abdul Hamid British Trust, Ltd., 72 per cent of the stock of the Abdul Hamid Mines, Ltd., 84 per cent of the Abdul Hamid Oil Concessions, Ltd., and the $106,000,000 stock of the Abdul Hamid Estates Inc.

These four companies, now existing under the laws of Great Britain, control the entire estates of the late Sultan, according to DeKay.

W. & L. Seniors Name Tucker Best Teacher

Bolen, '33 Grid Captain, Wins Classmates' Acclaim.

Lexington, Va., June 1 (Spl.).—Seniors at Washington and Lee University have selected Dr. Robert H. Tucker, dean of the university, as the faculty member who has done most for Washington and Lee and as the most capable professor.

Prof. J. Higgins Williams, of the political science department, was named the most popular professor, and Amos A. Bolen, of Ashland, Ky., captain of the 1933 football team and class valedictorian, was selected the most popular, most respected, and best all-round senior.

Dr. Tucker, professor of economics and business administration, has been on the faculty since 1915. He served as acting president in 1930 and as dean of the college from 1930 until appointment to his present position in 1932.

The Roosevelt Administration and its fundamental policies received the approval of the class, with 74 expressing the opinion that the nation is on the road to recovery. More than half of those who answered the questionnaire believe that the United States is drifting toward Socialism. Only two of them, however, favor the Socialist party.

Graduates-to-be declared themselves pacifists by a vote of 66-to-24. All but eight of them, however, would take up arms in defense of the United States if it were invaded.

The seniors selected publications work as the most worth-while extra-curricular activity. Athletics were second choice for both the most worth-while and the most useless. Sophomore honorary societies were chosen the most useless.

Red Sox Coast in After Nine Runs in First, Swamp Nats, 13 to 1

Pitching Trio Surrenders 20 Blows

Boston Runs Itself Out; Two Men Are Tagged to End Inning.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

THE crackling of hickory meeting hoss hide, sweet music to the visiting ball players from Boston, fell like a mournful lament on the ears of three Washington pitchers yesterday at Griffith Stadium where the Red Sox staged a parade without a permit and won a ball game by the lopsided score of 13 to 1.

Before the Nats could get the Red Sox out in that riotous first inning, the Red Sox had gotten two Washington pitchers out and were operating seriously on a third. By that time the Boston folks were concerned with getting in a legal game before darkness fell and called it quits after staking themselves to a 9-run lead.

Pound Out 20 Hits.

The ball game was packed into that first inning when the Sox unloaded 9 of their 20 hits against Al Crowder, Jack Russell and Alec McColl. Crowder could get only two batters out and Russell couldn't get any batters out at all. Old Alec really didn't produce the third out of the inning either. The Sox finally ran themselves out when Johnson was picked off first base and Morgan was caught at the plate on the play.

Faced with this nine-run deficit, the Nats succeeded only in averting a shut-out by the rejuvenated Herb Pennock, who was making his first start of the season. Pennock gave 'em a hit in every inning but the ninth, two in the thrid when Washington scored a run and succeeded in reducing the Boston lead to the still comfortable margin of 10 to 1.

That First Inning.

Cronin's Error oCstly.

After that, nothing mattered much, but it was Cronin's error midway during the inning that accounted for the Sox's last four runs. Morgan came up twice during the session and doubled twice. Johnson came up twice and singled twice.

Altogether, the Sox made 20 hits off the Washington pitching, with Morgan a prime offender with his two doubles and two singles. Carl Reynolds, who is supposed to fold up as a hitter during the summer months, contributed only a triple, double and two singles to the attack. Roy Johnson was a comparatively feeble hitter, getting only four singles.

The Nats, despite their nine hits off Pennock, were swinging a lot of dead wood up at the plate. They hit into three double plays and only Cronin's single with Manush on third in the third inning, saved them from a shutout. They have yet to win a ladies' day game.

McManus' Hit Wins Sixteen-Inning Game

Boston, June 1 (AP).—Marty McManus singled with two on base in the sixteenth inning to break up a weird battle and give the Braves an 8-to-7 victory over Brooklyn today.

Giants Victors; Cards' Lead Reduced

NEW YORK, June 1 (AP).—George Darrow's pitching and Irvine Jeffries' hitting almost beat the Giants today, but the world champions finally came through in the ninth inning to defeat the Phillies 4 to 3. The victory enabled the Giants to maintain their second-place tie with Chicago and reduce the St. Louis lead to half a game.

Darrow outlasted Carl Hubbell in a southpaw battle but Philly errors got him in trouble in the seventh and again in the ninth. Finally after two singles, an error and an intentional pass loaded the sacks in the ninth Bill Terry drove in the winning run with a one-bagger.

Jeffries knocked in all three Philadelphia runs with a double and a homer.

Hartnett's Home Run Downs Reds for Cubs

Cincinnati, June 1 (AP).—Smashing the ball high and far out of the field for a home run, Gabby Hartnett gave the Chicago Cubs a 3-to-1 victory over the Cincinnati Reds today.

His smash, off Bennie Frey, sailed 10 feet above the clock on the far outfield fence, traveling fully 425 feet. Old-timers called it the longest drive seen here. Driving in Jurges, who had doubled, it put the Cubs in the lead.

Cavalcade Is Favored Today In $25,000 American Derby

WASHINGTON PARK, Ill., June 1 (AP).—A slim chestnut colt named Cavalcade will try to the last ounce of his courage tomorrow to accomplish that which no other thoroughbred has been able t do for nearly 50 years—win both the Kentucky Derby and the American Derby. Spokane did it in 1889.

Cavalcade, owned by Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloane, of New York, winner of the Kentucky Derby, with ten others was named today to start in the $25,000 added American Derby, which will be run before a crowd that may reach 40,000. It will draw a great throng because it is the first real horse race the American Derby has been able to offer since its revival back in 1926, when Col. E. R. Bradley's Boot to Boot was the winner. The distance will be a mile and a quarter.

Garner to Ride.

The Brookmeade Stable, which Mrs. Sloane owns, will start two horses as an entry—Cavalcade and Anarchy—with Jockey Mack Garner, who rode the three-year-old to victory in the Kentucky classic, astride Cavalcade, and his nephew, Willie Garner, on Anarchy.

Cavalcade, with his stable mate Anarchy, was installed favorite tonight at 2 to 1, despite the fact he is giving 8 pounds in weight to Discovery, which trailed him home in the Kentucky Derby, 10 pounds to Mata Hari, the courageous little filly which set the early pace ni the Kentucky classic, and 5 pounds to Singing Wood, winner of the Withers' stake in New York.

Likely Favorite.

Although Cavalcade will surrender from 5 to 10 pounds to every horse in the field, there was no change in the sentiment that he would go to the post favorite. It is expected his stretch running ability would prove too much for the other ten contenders.

Regarded as the most dangerous of the contenders was Discovery, owned by Alfred G. Vanderbilt, of New York. Discovery is a stout-hearted stretch runner and finished right behind Cavalcade in both the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness.

Goslin Gets Homer As Tigers Win, 3-1

Chicago, June 1 (AP).—Aided by Goose Goslin's homer and Billy Rogell's productive hitting, Schoolboy Rowe shaded Ted Lyons in a pitchers' duel today and Detroit took the series opener from the White Sox, 3 to 1. Rowe had a shutout spoiled only by Al Simmons' seventh home run in the ninth inning.

One of the Detroit runs was unearned, Rogell scoring from third in the ninth after he and White had singled and Shortstop Luke Appling threw wild to the plate as Rogell broke for home when White was trapped trying to stretch his hit. The error was one of four by the Sox.

Nats, Red Sox In Twin Bill Today

Cronin to Use Thomas and Burke on Slab Against Grove and Welch.

WASHINGTON'S regular double-headed season starts this afternoon at 1:30, when the Nats and Red Sox play a game rained out on the Beaneaters' last visit here. In order to make it a real bargain day, Manager Stanley ((Bucky) Harris will start Lefty (Bob) Grove in one of the games. The former star of the A's, who has been of little use to the Red Sox this season because of a sore arm, reports he is just about back at top form and will try to prove it against the Nats today. He has won two of his three starts so far, but has not convinced his mates that he has his fast one of the good old days. Johnny Welch will do the Boston moundwork in the other fracas.

Skipper Joe Cronin, not any too well prepared as regards box talent, what with the recent Yankee series and the treatment dealt several others yesterday by the Red Sox, will counter with Al (Tommy) Thomas and Bobby Burke.

Last year when the Red Sox were going particularly poorly, their trainer, Doc Woods, iodined a baseball one day and gave it to the team to use in pregame practice. Immediately the Sox started to win. The medicated ball they had been using this season was autographed before yesterday's game and given away, the idea being that its luck had been worn out. A new one was colored yesterday—and see what happened to the Nats.

Dean on Pay Strike for Brother

Cardinal Ace Refuses to Pitch Until Paul Is Given Wage Boost.

Suspended by Frisch, He Says; Denial Made by Manager.

PITTSBURGH, June 1 (AP).—The brothers Dean today reported their arms were too sore for pitching purposes and baseball writers immediately jumped to the conclusion their ailments were caused by Paul's salary, which Dizzy seeks to increase by $2,000.

The loquacious Dizzy went so far as to say he would not throw another ball for the St. Louis Cardinals unless the club agreed to give brother Paul a new contract calling for a salary increase.

Dizzy's status with the club was uncertain tonight. The star right-hander said he had been suspended by Manager Frankie Frisch. Frisch said he had taken no disciplinary action. Paul, serving his first year in big time, presumably remained in good standing.

Salary of $3,000.

Repeatedly Dizzy and Paul have threatened to "strike" unless Paul's $3,000 salary became $5,000, and to all purposes the "walkout" began today.

"He has a sore arm," Frisch said when asked why Dizzy didn't pitch against the Pirates today, as he was scheduled to do. "I didn't know it until we were in the clubhouse going over the hitters."

"I developed a sore arm before we left St. Louis," Dizzy said, "but I pitched a game in New York and another in Philadelphia in spite of the pain and won both games. Frisch promised me in New York he would see to it that Paul got a raise, but last night he told me he wasn't going to do anything of the kind. I'm not going to run the risk of ruining my pitching arm working when it is sore.

Have Won 11 Games.

"I'm satisfied, as far as my contract is concerned, though I'm not getting half of what I'm worth, but it ain't right to expect Paul to pitch the way he can pitch for $3,000 a year. We've won 11 games between us, besides saving several games for the club as relief pitchers, and together we're getting only $10,500."

Paul said he injured his arm in yesterday's game at Cincinnati.

"What Dizzy says is right," he added. "I was told in New York that I'd be fixed up when I got home and I took that to mean I'd get a new contract, now Dizzy has been told we can get out of uniform if we don't want to pitch."

Paul has won five straight games this year. Fix of Dizzy's six victories have been added since April 29, when the Cardinals started a climb which carried them to the top of the National League.

Pirates' Late Rally Trims Cards, 4 to 3

Pittsburgh, June 1 (AP).—The Pittsburgh Pirates rallied brilliantly in the ninth inning today, putting on a three-run drive to win from the league-leading St. Louis Cardinals, 4 to 3, and simultaneously snapped a losing streak that reached five straight games.

"Wild" Bill Hallahan left-handed his way through eight innings in magnificent fashion, holding the Pirates to 1 run and four hits, but he blew up in the last of the ninth.

The Mackmen collected a dozen blows, including Bob John's tenth home run of the season, off De Shong and his successor, Burleigh Grimes, but it was a Yankee misplay which did the real damage.

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., June 1.—Washout, which gets her name from Washerwoman, her mama, turned in 5 fast furlongs today to win the feature race at the Shenandoah Jockey Club's race plant here. As has been the case in four out of five feature races since the meeting started, the race was decided by a nose margin with the defeated schnozzle being that of Vacillate. Silverdale, the old badlegged veteran, ankled into third money a half-length away.

The race was a thriller with Washout, ridden by the fashionable Sam Palumbo, in the star role. The ultimate winner was away flying and hooked up in a brief duel with Noajoyce. This one soon threw up the sponge and Silverdale came up to press the pact setter. Washout managed to cling to an advantage ranging from a half to length over the veteran. On the turn for the stretch, it was apparent that Vacillate was the one that the flying Washout would have to beat.

Steadily, Vacillate cut down the lead, but that final jump was missing at the finish. Palumbo was performing all sorts of gymnastics on Washout to keep her ahead and he did.

The daily double shrunk to a mere $9.20 mutuel today. The horses involved in the parlay bet were Strange Times and Serenabit, both well backed.

The Washington Smiths had a big day. Their horse, Repeal, won a sensational nose- decision over Nay Nay, 15-to-1 shot, in the fourth race. Eddie Smith, junior member of the firm, did the riding and turned in a masterful piece of work. He also won the sixth race with Tristrap to divide the riding honors with Palumbo, who piloted Strange Times in addition to Washout.

MAPLE PRINCE had no excuses. KHARAON was sluggish in the early racing, and made up some ground. WEE TUNE crossed her legs and fell while racing prominently.

DAISY BUCK gradually improved her position, closed with a rush, but was no match for the winner. DONA DULCIN, slow to get going, was shut off when leaving the back stretch, came on again when clear, but could not get up. PINK POST raced evenly. GOLDEN GWYN had early speed, but stopped badly.

REPEAL, slow as usual in the early running, gradually improved his position on the outside on the back stretch, circled the leaders when straight in the front stretch, and, under powerful handling, was up to the final wire. NAY NAY, had good early speed while racing hugged on the outside of GOLDEN CASTLE, finished well, and just failed to tie. GOLDEN CASTLE, away forwardly, and having good speed, saved ground throughout, and hung on well. BURLEIGH, a forward factor at all times, could not get to the leaders. HOSAIN closed some ground. WASHOUT, away well and having good speed, raced NOAJOYCE into submission in the early racing, drew out into a short lead entering the stretch, but had to be hard urged to stall off VACILLATE. Stock Losses Increase as Selling Widens

Oppressed by strike threats, crop damage reports and gloom in brokerage circles over the drying up of speculation, the market got poor support on the buying side.

Losses of 1 to 4 points were chalked up at the finish against such issues as United States Steel preferred and common, Bethlehem Steel, American Can, General Motors, Chrysler, International Business Machines, American Locomotive, American Telephone & Telegraph, J. I. Case, Commercial Solvents, Corn Products, Du Pont, Santa Fe, Union Pacific and Sears Roebuck.

Steel Shares Lead Drop.

Steel shares led the decline. Volume on the stock exchange, swelled by a late selling flurry, expanded to 626,789 shares compared with 438,400 in the preceding session. The average price of 90 stocks closed 1.9 points lower at 74.4 compared with 74.8 on May 12, the previous closing low this year.

The upturn in the dollar against foreign exchanges this week opened the way for renewed inflow of gold from France on a small scale, according to late reports from Paris.

Stock Selling Continues.

Dribbling liquidation in stocks continued through the forenoon in face of the further advance of more than 4 cents a bushel in wheat. Wall Street figured crop losses would outweigh whatever benefits farmers would get in the way of higher prices.

With brokers cutting staffs to make ends meet through the present dull spell, sentiment in speculative quarters was gloomy. Rail shares yielded with the general list, despite a further better-than-seasonal increase of 13,425 cars in freight loadings last week. The total at 624,567 was near the March top.

Administration efforts to stop the threatened steel and textile strikes failed to stem liquidation in those groups. U. S. Steel preferred was an outstanding weak spot. It dipped 4 points to 80, a new 1934 low.

Motor and other industrial groups facing seasonal curtailment in operations were in the forefront of the decline.

Weekly trade summaries reported tension in business had increased, although they predicted the main recovery movement would be resumed by autumn and noted improvement in consumer demand for goods the past week.

Wall Street Briefs

New York, June 1 (AP).—Sales of Plymouth cars during the week ended May 26 totaled 7,707 units compared with 7,315 in the previous week and 6,091 units in the same week in 1933.

Net electric output of the Associated Gas & Electric System for the week ended May 26 totaled 56,134,932 kilowatt hours, an increase of 4.9 per cent over the same week last year. Gas output was 327,708,500 cubic feet, an increase of 8.9 per cent.

Bond offerings in the current week totaled $5,000,000 compared with $16,390,400 in the previous week and $5,410,000 in the same period a year ago.

The New York Stock Exchange has substituted on the list Socony Vacuum Oil Co., Inc., new capital stock of $15 par value in lieu of the $25 par shares of Socony Vacuum Corporation. The change in name and par value was ratified by stockholders at their annual meeting yesterday.

United States lead stocks on May 1 totaled 299,927 short tons against 298,293 on April 1 and 284,308 on May 1, 1933, the American Bureau of Metals statistics reports.

J. P. Morgan & Co. and the National City Bank of New York, as fiscal agents, are notifying holders of government of the Argentine nation external sinking fund 6 per cent gold bonds, issue of June 1, 1925, due June 1, 1959, that $428,634 in cash is available for the purchase for the sinking fund of so many of these bonds as shall be accepted for purchase at prices below par.

Wool Market.

Boston, June 1 (A.P.) (U. S. Dept. Agr.).—The demand for territory wool continued extremely dull in the Boston market. Dealers, however, adhered strictly to their asking prices. The few sales reported were made within the range of prices that have been quoted for the past few weeks. Recent sales included French combing 64s and finer territory wool in original bags at 80@82 cents, scoured basis and a small quantity of strictly combing 56s, 70 blood territory wool at 79@81 cents.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

By Ralph West Robey.

Strict accuracy, perhaps, is more than one should expect from any one as busy dodging dead cats as is Gen. Johnson. Still it does not seem to me completely unreasonable to think that he might be a little more considerate of facts than he was in his radio speech Thursday night. It probably would be a bit strong to say of his speech, as he said of the charge that NRA tends toward monopoly, that it "is the most audacious perversion of the truth that was ever presented to the American people," but it certainly does even more than bear out his statement that "for many months" he has been "separated from books of reference."

He says, for example, that "there is not one principle for which Mr. Mills speaks that does not tend in exactly the reverse direction" from "the elimination of special privilege, the creation of proper wages and working conditions for labor, the cessation of exploitation of the weak—child labor, sweatshops and the oppression of all those who are weary and heavy laden." Further, that Mr. Mills and his "school of thought" never did and never will "advocate anything that did not slant toward the aggrandizement of the strong and the suppression of the weak."

Mills Taken As Representing All Opposition.

Now I certainly have no desire to enter a defense for Mr. Ogden Mills. Gen. Johnson, however, is taking him as representative of virtually all criticism of the NRA. He is able, thereby, to maintain that all such criticism is merely for political purpose—a means whereby "the greatest forward social movement of our day and age is to be sabotaged to advance the selfish political interest of a handful of demagogues."

I refuse to think that Gen. Johnson believes this. It is incredible that he should be so blind as not to know that there is a rather enormous number of people in this country, quite free of all political bias or aspiration, who have been unable to accept as sound the whole thesis of the NDA, to say nothing of some of the policies it has followed. To find evidence of the latter he need only recall some of the resignations from his own staff. And he might remember that there are many people in the country who object to the higher prices—higher prices for which he takes credit in this speech by boasting that he has ended the practice of mass producers selling "at prices so low that the independent could not survive."

Say the Old Deal Had A "Do Nothing" Program.

Another line of thought advanced by Mr. Johnson is that the distinction between the New Deal and the Old Deal is "the difference between 'do something' and 'do nothing.'" I wonder whether the general really thinks that having the Federal reserve banks buy $1,100,000,000 of Government bonds, creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, adopting a public works program, coming to the aid of mortgagors through Federal land banks, extending direct relief to the unemployed through States, granting a moratorium on the interallied debts providing for direct lending to industry through the Federal Reserve, and the other Hoover policies constituted a "do nothing" program.

These various steps may have been ineffective, and I always thought that by and large they were unsound and would prolong the depression, but obviously the Old Deal was not a "do nothing" party. In fact, one of the reasons that some of us have objections to the New Deal program is that to a great extent it consists of nothing but an aggravation of the policies of the Old Deal that we thought were bad.

The general, of course, knows all of this. He knows, too, as we all do, that there are many real accomplishments of which NRA properly may boast. Constant reiteration of these may not make a good speech, but it makes a better case for NRA.

Curb's Prices Continue Fall In Dull Session

New York, June 1 (AP).—The curb market today moderately extended Thursday's reaction in another dull trading session. The majority of shares ended with declines of fractions to around a point, a few specialties dipping more.

Dealings were a bit more active in the last hour but transfers for the day approximated only 113,000 shares compared with 107,000 yesterday. Between 1 and 2 o'clock only 12,000 shares changed hands.

Utilities, firm in the forenoon, yielded fractionally near the close. Dow Chemical dipped 2, while losses of around a point were suffered by Greyhound Corporation, Calambra Sugar, Sherwin Williams and Waco Aircraft. Aluminum Co. of America common rose 2 points but the preferred issue dropped 3.

Fractional declines prevailed in shares of International Petroleum, Hiram Walker, Electric Bond & Share and Humble Oil, while Standard Oil of Indiana and Newmont finished even.

Bond Market Sags Fraction After Advance

New Highs in Early Sales Ease as Trading Rises to $10,533,000.

New York, June 1 (AP).—After a number of high grade railroad and utility issues reached new highs for the year, the bond market turned easy in the late trading today.

United States Government loans, which had displayed a steady tone in earlier transactions, also yielded enough of their advances to show losses of one thirty-second to nine thirty-seconds in all issues except Home Owners loans, which closed higher. Secondary bonds were generally lower.

Transfers totaled $10,533,000, compared with $10,230,000 Thursday. The average price for 60 domestic corporate bonds was off one-tenth of a point at 85.7.

Labor News Disturb.

Disturbing news concerning the labor situation in the steel and other basic industries which helped to depress stock prices, was partly responsible for the further declines in speculative bonds.

Among the issues which reached new highs before yielding were American Telephone collateral 5s, Cincinnati Gas 4s, Oregon-Washington Railroad 4s, Pennsylvania General 5s.

The slight set-back in the Government loans coincided with the announcement from Washington that the Treasury would reveal on Monday its plans for the June 15 refinancing. Strength of home owners loan bonds reflected in part the fact that the corporation allowed May 31 to go by without issuing a call for the redemption of the 4 per cent obligations.

Domestic Issues Lower.

Domestic issues closing lower included loans of Associated Oil, American Telephone, Atlantic Refining, B. & O. Railroad, Bethlehem Steel, Brooklyn Edison, Canadian National Railway, Northern Pacific, Postal Telegraph, Southern Pacific Standard Oil of New Jersey, Shell Union Oil, Union Oil of California, United States Rubber, Western Electric, Western Union and Youngstown Sheet & Tube.

North American Edison 5s, Pure Oil 5½s, Southwestern Bell Telephone 5s, Union Pacific 4½s and Utica Gas & Electric 5s were small fractions to a point or so higher.

The foreign list was featured by a 3-point drop in Colombia 6s, and a 2-point rise in Argentine 6s. German Government 7s yielded around a point.

General Mills Votes Regular $1.50 Dividend

Commercial Credit Board Declares Usual Returns on Stocks.

New York, June 1.—The board of directors of General Mills, Inc. today announces the declaration of the regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 per share upon the preferred stock of the company, payable July 2 to all preferred stockholders of record at the close of business June 14.

Chicago, June 1 (AP).—Directors of the Central Power Co. have declared a dividend of 87½ cents a share on the 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock and 75 cents on the 6 per cent cumulative preferred, the first dividends authorized since last July 15. Payment will be made July 16 to stockholders of record June 30.

Baltimore, June 1.—At the regular meeting of the board of directors of Commercial Credit Co. held here Thursday regular quarterly dividends on the 6½ per cent and 7 per cent first preferred, 8 per cent class B preferred and the $3 class A convertible stocks were declared. A quarterly dividend of 25 cents was also declared on the common stock of the company. All dividends are payable June 30, 1934, to stockholders of record at 12 m. on June 9, 1934.

New York, June 1 (AP).—Directors of the International Silver Co. today declared a dividend of $1 a share on the 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock, payable July 1 to stock of record June 14. A like disbursement was ordered three months ago.

Directors of Edison Bros. Stores of St. Louis have declared a dividend of 25 cents a common share payable June 25, to stock of record June 11. The last payment was 12½ cents a share on October 30, 1931. A statement by the board said that the payment should not be regarded as establishing the stock on a $1 annual basis, but is a disbursement reflecting favorable earnings over the past year.

Trade Trends.

(Associated Press.)

Canning—Fruit crops for canning, raised principally on the West Coast and in Florida, were believed in trade circles to be unharmed by the drought that has done much damage to crops generally in the West. It was pointed out that in the case of corn and tomatoes, both important vegetables to the canning industry, are harvested in the late summer months, and therefore unaffected by present weather conditions.

Gasoline—Bulk gasoline markets continued to improve with low octane material moving at 4⅜ to 4¾ cents a gallon. The position of refiners has been materially strengthened in the past two or three weeks by substantial purchases by major companies.

Glass—Although the demand for plate and window glass is reported slower, other types of glass products are moving in good volume, especially glasses adopted for use at liquor bars.

Chemicals—Industrial and Engineering Chemistry, published by the American Chemical Society, advocates immediate steps to protect the domestic potash industry in the face of what is described as "new and determined" competition from Germany, Russia, France and Spain.

Import Curb Prolonged.

A German government decree has prolonged until June 30, 1934, the prohibition of purchases abroad of wool and woolens, according to a cablegram received in the Department of Commerce from Acting Commercial Attache Douglas Miller, Berlin. (The import prohibition on other textile raw materials, which is to expire on May 31, 1934, has not been prolonged).

Foreign Markets.

London—Prices on the stock exchange were irregular today with trading idle. Profit taking exceeded new buying orders, but gold mining and rubber shares were firm exceptions. Argentine rails were better on prospects of improved exchange facilities, but German bonds weakened. The closing was steady.

Paris—Trading on the bourse was inactive, and prices were generally heavy. Rentes strengthened, but industrials and gold mining shares weakened. Only rubber shares were strong. The closing was steady.

Berlin—Firmness prevailed on the boerse, loan liquidation bonds touching 22.1 marks with a turnover of 10,000,000 on the strength of the conversion announcement. The market closed sustained.

Goods Markets.

New York, June 1 (A.P.).—The demand for unfinished cotton goods showed a little improvement today. Brown sheetings for bag purposes sold in small lots at the lowest prices of the year. The Dollar Abroad

(Associated Press.)

The dollar advanced to further new highs on the move in European exchange markets, especially in relation to the pound sterling and the French franc. Foreign currencies revealed rallying tendencies in the New York trading, however. Italian lire enjoyed a sharp rally, which carried the New York rate up .08¼ of a cent to 8.60¾ cents, largely on short covering in Paris.

The dollar moved ¾ of a cent higher in London, to close at 5.06¾ to the pound, compared with Thursday's 5.07⅛. At one time the rate went as low as 5.06⅛. The pound was quoted at $5.06¾ in New York, an overnight rise of ¼ cent.

The price of gold in London increased 2 pence to 137 shillings 1½ pence a fine ounce (equivalent to $34.70 at the dollar's opening of 5.06⅛). Bars valued at about $1,401,966 were sold, presumably for American account.

The dollar gained 1½ centimes in Paris, closing at the equivalent of 6.58¼ cents to the franc, after touching 6.58 cents. French francs were quoted at 6.58½ cents in New York, representing the recovery of all but .00¼ of a cent of the low. Other gold currencies in New York were quoted slightly higher than on Thursday.

Low Mark Is Set in Bank Clearings

Total Is 1.4 Per Cent Under 1933 Period; Holiday Blamed.

New York, June 1 (AP).—Bank clearings in the past week were the lowest in more than a year, Dun & Bradstreet's Weekly Survey showed. The total of $3,494,490,000 was 1.4 per cent below the same period a year ago.

The small total was due to the curtailment of the week by the May 30 holiday as well as to the sharp reduction in clearings in New York City. Total exchanges in New York City for the five days ended May 29 amounted to $2,277,907,000, a reduction of 10.4 per cent from last year. Clearings in other leading cities of the country were $1,216,563,000. A gain of 21.2 per cent over last year.

The loss at New York City reflected largely the reduced trading on securities markets, the report said. The week's clearings for all reporting cities were $832,498,000 below the preceding six-day period. A year ago, the reduction between the two weeks was only $363,295,000. Gains over a year ago were notable in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and most Southern cities. Clearings for the month of May were 12.1 per cent below April. The latter month was the largest in two years.

Prior to that service he will celebrate at the Holy Communion at 8 a. m., assisted by his new curate, the Rev. James Madison, who was ordained by Bishop Freeman at the Cathedral on Trinity Sunday.

At 9:45 a. m. there will be a brief service, with address, in the church, for the Sunday school, followed by class instruction in the Parish House.

He was ordained deacon in 1916 and priest a year later. He left the active parochial ministry in the early part of 1918 to join the armed forces of America, and later saw service in France as chaplain of the First Division.

He returned to his native land and State in 1919 and became an assistant minister at St. Michael's Church, Charleston, S. C. Dr. Hart left St. Michael's to become rector of Christ Church, Macon, Ga., and during his administration there he wrote a history of this famous church. He was State chaplain of the American Legion, Department of Georgia, in 1924. He was rector of St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., from 1926 up to last Sunday, when he preached his last serson to that congregation as their pastor.

Congregational Evening Services Are Discontinued.

Dr. Allen A. Stockdale, pastor of the First Congregational Church, will preach at 11 a. m. tomorrow on "Ten Bridesmaids." There will be no evening services during June, July and August. The vested choir of 60 voices, under the direction of Ruby Smith Stahl, will sing. This will be the last appearance of the choir this season. Paul DeLong Gable will be at the organ.

The Calvin Coolidge Men's Class, Dr. B. B. James leader, meets at 10 a. m. in the east parlor. The Young People's Society will hold its annual business meeting and election of officers at 6:30 p. m. The society will hold its annual banquet at Brook Farm Tea House, 6501 Brookville road, Chevy Chase, Md., Friday, at 8 p. m.

Dr. Zimmerman Will Preach at Church of Reformation.

Dr. L. M. Zimmerman will be the guest speaker at the Church of the Reformation tomorrow morning when he preaches on "Christ on the Heights." Dr. Zimmerman is a pastor emeritus of Christ Lutheran Church, Baltimore, of which he was pastor for 38 years.

Pending completion of the new church building, church and Sunday school services are being held in the Avenue Grand Theater.

Dr. Weaver Will Begin Sermon Series Tomorrow

"The Creation of the Church," the first of a series of sermons on "The Church of Christ," will be the subject of Dr. Rufus W. Weaver at the First Baptist Church tomorrow morning. His evening subjects during the month will be centenary in character, the first being on "William Carey," world-renowned missionary, who died 100 years ago.

Lesson Sermon Will Deal With Necromancy Tomorrow.

"Ancient and Modern Necromancy, alias Mesmerism and Hypnotism Denounced," is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all the Churches of Christ, Scientist tomorrow. The Golden Text is from Psalms 7:9 "Oh let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; but establish the just: for the righteous God trieth the hearts and reigns."

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Memories of Gethsemane

A Traveler Recalls the Old Monk Who Keeps the Garden Where Christ Suffered; Name Has Gone Through the World as Synonym for Pain.

By William T. Ellis.

My most treasured memories of Jerusalem center in the Mount of Olives. Always, when in the city, I go to see my friend, the old Franciscan monk, who keeps the Latin Garden of Gethsemane. We do not talk much; for his English is as limited as my French. When first I knew him he was the gardener, working happily beneath eight gnarled olive trees. I shall never forget the hurt look in his eyes when I questioned whether the oldest tree was the veritable one beneath which Jesus agonized. "Vraiment, Monsieur; vraiment"—Truly, sir, truly."

That old tree is gone now, and the garden is restricted, because an ornate church has been built on the site; and my friend of the open air sits as its unhappy guardian, shivering in the raw cold of winter. He preferred the simple growing things of his garden, as he moved lovingly among them, made happy by the thoughts of the Master who once prayed on this spot, or somewhere near.

We may never know the exact site of the Garden of Gethsemane—three historic churches have enclosed what they believe to be the true scene of the agony—but we can be very certain that it was somewhere on this hillside, overlooking Jerusalem, and within sound of one's voice, that the supreme agony of earth was undergone by the Saviour of the world.

A Synonym for Sorrow.

Into all the speech of civilization has gone the word "Gethsemane," as a synonym for any supreme suffering. This is not quite correct; for the Garden was more than a scene of suffering; it was the place of renunciation and resignation. On the inward side of the gate from every Garden of Gethsemane seeing eyes may read, "Not my will, but Thine." Not the sorrow, but the acceptance, makes a Gethsemane. The spirit of the place and of the ordeal was caught by Ella Wheeler Wilcox's familiar lines:

"In golden youth when seems the earth
A summer land of singing mirth,
When souls are glad, and hearts are light,
And not a shadow lurks in sight,
We do not know it, but there lies
Somewhere, veiled under evening skies,
A garden which we all must see—
The garden of Gethsemane.

"With joyous steps we go our ways;
Love lends a halo to our days;
Light sorrows sail like clouds afar,
We laugh, and say how strong we are,
We hurry on; and hurrying, go
Close to the borderland of woe,
That waits for you, and waits for me—
Forever waits Gethsemane.

"Down shadowy lanes, across strange streams,
Bridged over by our broken dreams;
Behind the misty capes of years,
Beyond the great salt fount of tears
The garden lies. Strive as you may,
You can not miss it in your way.
All paths that have been, or shall be,
Pass somewhere through Gethsemane.

"All those who journey, soon or late,
Must pass within the garden's gate;
Must kneel alone in darkness there,
And battle with some fierce despair.
God pity those who can not say,
'Not mine, but Thine;' who only pray
'Let this cup pass,' and can not see
The purpose in Gethsemane."

In our tragic time, which has dotted every person's horizon with disasters, we have had overfull experience of those who could see no deeper significance in the ordeal. Men have died by thousands, at their own hands and from broken hearts, because things have failed them. Alas, that the world's trial has not been more fully a Gethsemane!

As the Curtain Falls.

In this course of lessons we have come to the last scenes of the life of Jesus. He had, on the eve of His arrest and crucifixion, shared His last Passover in secret seclusion with His inner circle of friends. He had instituted the Rite of Memory, the Last Supper. With the Psalmist's hymn of praise on His lips He had fared forth to the solitude of Olivet's slope.

These closing hours of mortal life revealed the heart-hunger of the Master for the friendship of those dearest to Him. Like a grim shadow there hung over the farewell meal the consciousness that all would forsake Him in the hour of ordeal. They protested fealty to the death. As usual, Peter was most voluble. He meant every word of his assurances of loyalty, so confident was he of his own faith. Yet before the cock crew, Peter had thrice denied his Lord, with cursings. Verily, "Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall."

As for Judas, the good man who had deteriorated in the most favorable associations—Judas, the only disciple from orthodox Judea — he has become the world's supreme symbol of the man corrupted by avarice into black treason. Assuredly, Judas thought himself more "practical" than his associates or his Master. He was the "hard-boiled business man" of the group—and the uttermost failure. His "thirty pieces of silver" have become a synonym so opprobrious that the phrase may not be used in modern legislative debate. Peter's boastful self-assurance, and Judas' cupidity, stand as red lights of warning along history's highway.

One Soul Alone.

There was nobody to watch with Jesus while He knelt under the olive trees. A legend has it that when the olive trees, which were straight and smooth like other trees, beheld the agony of Christ they became bowed and twisted and contorted in sympathy; and that is why all olive trees are gnarled today.

Alone, in the black shadow cast by the olive trees under the full Passover moon, Jesus knelt in agony—an agony so deep that it forced drops of bloody sweat from His brow. He had asked His three dearest friends to watch nearby. But they did not understand. Even our closest and most beloved do not comprehend our soul's crises. The disciples slept, even as they had slept at the Transfiguration. In all our highest and deepest hours we are alone. Of Jesus the old scripture was true: "He trod the winepress alone"—that no other soul might thereafter be without His sympathetic championship.

The Great Acceptance.

Words are futile things when they deal with such a superlative experience as that of Christ in Gethsemane. Nobody can write tenderly enough, sympatheticaly enough, understandingly enough, as he dwells upon the spectacle of the anguished Saviour, pleading that this cup might pass. It is one of the sublime mysteries which only eternity can make plain.

We can not overstress the anguish, but we do underemphasize the acceptance. For the keyword of Gethsemane is "Thy will be done." Resignation to the Will that had its purpose in the counsels of eternity marked the Son who knelt before the Father. Just a few hours ahead lay the shameful trial, the bitter scourging and mocking, the horrible agony of the Cross; all clear to the consciousness of Christ. Nevertheless, He could say triumphantly, "Thy will be done." And that is the great lesson of Gethsemane.

Wheat Retreats As Rain Falls; Rallies Later

Word that it was raining at several points in southern Saskatchewan, together with reports of showers in spring wheat States Northwest, served as a signal of possibility that ending of the United States' unprecedented drought and abnormal heat was at last in sight.

The result was a stampede to grab profits while the grabbing was good, and this ran the markets suddenly into stop-loss selling orders of unusual magnitude.

Fall of Prices.

In the late sensational fall of prices, wheat went to 1⅛ cents below yesterday's finish, more than offsetting 4¼ cents overnight advance, that had smashed season top price records in every kind of grain, and had outdone all recent exhibitions of hectic general buying.

With something of a rally in progress, however, during the final dealings, wheat closed irregular, ⅝ lower to ⅛ higher compared with 24 hours previous; corn 1¾ to 2¼ down; oats ⅝ to ⅞ advanced, and provisions at a rise of 7 to 10 cents.

A contributing reason for the late right-about-face action of the wheat market, changing from extraordinary strength to comparative weakness, was that unofficial monthly crop reports issued today had been largely discounted beforehand, at least for the time being.

Reports Called Bullish.

These reports were construed as bullish in the extreme, as they did not allow for major crop damage done since May 25 by combined drought and heat.

An average of today's private estimates nevertheless indicated 1934 domestic winter and spring wheat production would total but 547,000,000 bushels, the smallest total with one exception in 30 years, whereas forecasts of 550,000,000 or more had generally been expected up to the moment the reports were given out.

One of the reports indicated 108,000,000 bushels loss of winter wheat in 30 days, a record in American agriculture. Spring wheat, it was asserted, was already a failure over large areas, and the condition of the spring wheat crop as a whole was figured as 12 points under 1930, the previous low record.

1934 Wheat Crop.

It was emphasized the prospective total 1934 United States wheat crop would be less than either a 5-year or a 10-year average production, and that apparently the coming year would greatly reduce or altogether absorb the Nation's theoretical surplus of wheat.

Friends of higher prices contended tonight that it must not be supposed scattering moisture in parts of the Northwest could correct a crop situation that had taken months to bring about. It was added that the market was still a weather affair, and that if tomorrow nothing but light rains were shown a resumption of upward trends of wheat prices could be expected.

Corn and oats prices were mainly governed by the action of wheat. The country sold corn freely on advances.

Loans to Brokers Climb $10,000,000

(Associated Press.)

Loans to brokers and dealers held by weekly reporting New York City Federal Reserve member banks amounted to $915,000,000 during the week ended May 30, representing an increase of $10,000,000 for the week.

In making this announcement today the Federal Reserve Board said loans for the week ended May 31, 1933, were $635,000,000.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

The term beer includes all liquors brewed from malted grains, commonly barley, with hops or other substances added to give it a characteristic bitter flavor. Starches in other forms are often also added. Ale is also beer, but is heavier and has a higher alcoholic content than most beers. The term beer as popularly used excludes ale, although that drink is really a type of beer.

* * * *

Every year for seven years the same mallard duck has built her nest in a box on top of F. J. Keller's barn at Rainbow's End Game Refuge, Antioch, Nebr. She first appeared there in 1927, at which time Mr. Keller banded one leg with a Biological Survey band No. 555414. Last year the first band was so worn that another number, A604109, was placed on the other leg.

A604109 has raised more than 100 ducklings in her nesting place on the barn, among them a brood that was not really her own. Last year Mr. Keller noticed that her eggs were abnormally small, so he substituted a set of pintail eggs for them. These she hatched.

The Bureau of Biological Survey keeps a record of the mallard and her offspring. Some of her young have been taken by hunters north as far as Canada, west as far as Arizona, and south as far as Louisiana.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY Welcoming Peggy By Harry J. Tuthill

WHY GEORGE BUNSLE THE IDEA OF YOU STALKING INTO THIS HOUSE LOOKING AS THOUSH YOU WERE WALKING IN YOUR SLEEP. DON'T YOU SEE WHO'S HERE?
HELLO DAD.
PEGGY! MY WORD, I'M GLAD TO SEE YOU. FINE! GREAT!
SHE GOT HERE THIS MORNING. DOESN'T SHE LOOK GOOD? GEORGE, ARE YOU LISTENING TO ME?
WHAT'S WRONG, DAD? YOU LOOK SO EXCITED.
LISTEN, DO YOU KNOW WHO CALLED ME A BURGLAR TODAY? ME! A RED-HOT!
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
DAD! YOU A DETECTIVE? REALLY?
THERE'S THE THANKS I GET FOR FINDING MONTGOMERY EL DORADO'S SILVERWARE. HE'S THE ONE WHO CALLED ME A BURGLAR.
DON'T CALL ME THAT AGAIN, I SAID TO HIM, BECAUSE MILLIONAIRES LOOK LIKE ANYBODY ELSE TO ME AND...
DAD, WHAT IN THE WORLD IS ALL THIS? SILVERWARE, AND MONTY, AND.....
GEORGE YOU MEAN YOU FOUGHT AGAIN WITH THAT NICE MAN.....YOU THREATENED HIM? A MAN WHO OWNS HALF OF THIS TOWN?

JOE JINKS, Featuring Dynamite Dunn Wow! By Llanuza

BIG JIM KELLY, ON THE OTHER END OF THE WIRE, WAITS FOR JOE'S ACCEPTANCE OF A WINNER-TAKE-ALL MATCH WITH BATTLING BLITZEN-JOE IS WILLING BUT DYNAMITE REFUSES.....
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.: © 1934 by United Feature Syndicate, Inc.
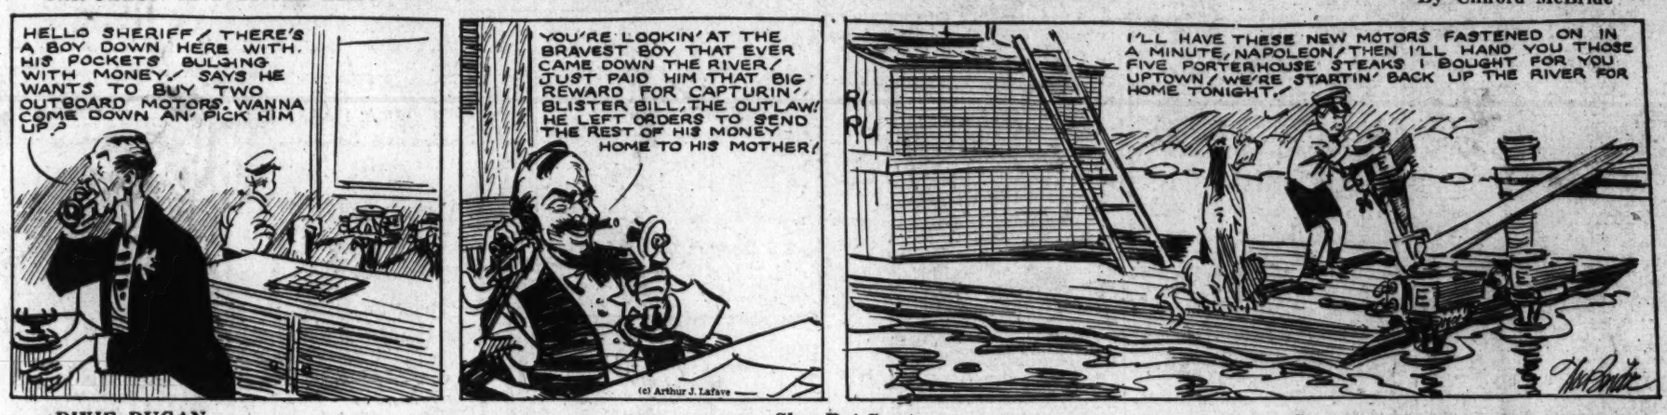
IT AIN'T FAIR — THAT'S WHY!
AW, WHY AIN'T IT FAIR?
AW, DON'T BE DUMB JOE — YOU KNOW AS WELL AS I DO THAT BLITZEN OUGHTA GET SOMETHIN' FOR FIGHTIN' ME!
SO THAT'S IT! YOU GAVE ME HEART FAILURE FOR A MINUTE! I THOUGHT YOU WAS WORRIED ABOUT HOW YOU'D COME OUT IN THE FIGHT — LISTEN — YOU LET ME HANDLE THIS — ALONE!
O.K. JOE
HELLO KELLY — TELL THAT BIG SLUG BLITZEN DYNAMITE'S READY TO SIGN ON HIS TERMS — WINNER TAKE ALL!

NAPOLEON AND UNCLE ELBY By Clifford McBride



HELLO SHERIFF / THERE'S A BOY DOWN HERE WITH HIS POCKETS BULGING WITH MONEY / SAYS HE WANTS TO BUY TWO OUTBOARD MOTORS. WANNA COME DOWN AN' PICK HIM UP?
YOU'RE LOOKIN' AT THE BRAVEST BOY THAT EVER CAME DOWN THE RIVER / JUST PAID HIM THAT BIG REWARD FOR CAPTURIN' BLISTER BILL, THE OUTLAW! HE LEFT ORDERS TO SEND THE REST OF HIS MONEY HOME TO HIS MOTHER!
(c) Arthur J. Lafave
I'LL HAVE THESE NEW MOTORS FASTENED ON IN A MINUTE, NAPOLEON / THEN I'LL HAND YOU THOSE FIVE PORTERHOUSE STEAKS I BOUGHT FOR YOU UPTOWN / WE'RE STARTIN' BACK UP THE RIVER FOR HOME TONIGHT.

DIXIE DUGAN Slow But Sure By J. P. McEvoy and J. H. Striebel

TELL ME ABOUT THIS MAN YOU MET!
WELL — IT WAS AT A HOTEL — TH' MINUTE I SAW HIM I KNEW HE WAS SOMEBODY — HE WAS SO HANDSOME, BUT DIFFERENT LOOKING AN' FINE AN' — WELL, TH' FIRST TIME OUR EYES MET A THRILL WENT RIGHT THROUGH ME —
WE PASSED EACH OTHER A HALF-DOZEN TIMES BUT HE NEVER SAID ANYTHING — ONLY HE DID LOOK INTERESTED TOO — THEN, ONE NIGHT, SOMEBODY HAD DROPPED A CHOCOLATE CREAM ON TH' LOBBY FLOOR AN' I SLIPPED ON IT — AN' THERE HE WAS — TO CATCH ME IN HIS ARMS
I THANKED HIM, AND HE SAID "DON'T MENTION IT" — AN' WE LEFT TH' NEXT DAY — AN' I NEVER SAW HIM AGAIN
SO THAT WAS TH' GREAT ROMANCE?
MICKEY — IF YOU'D A' BEEN AN INDIAN YOU'D A' COME HOME FROM TH' WARPATH WITH A HALF-A-WALNUT SHELL TIED TO YOUR BELT — KIDDING YOURSELF IT WAS A SCALP —

THE GUMPS Going in Circles

WHAT AM I GOING TO DO — WHAT CAN I DO? NOT A PLACE IN THE CITY WHERE I CAN GET A CHECK CASHED — MY REAL ESTATE TIED UP — MY BUSINESS AT A STAND-STILL — TO THINK THAT I HAVE BEEN BROUGHT TO THIS BY THE ONE PERSON I LOVED ABOVE ALL OTHERS —
6-2
MAYBE I OUGHT TO OFFER THEM A SETTLEMENT — SATISFY THEIR GRASPING DEMANDS AND GO BACK TO AUSTRALIA FOR THE REST OF MY LIFE — WHAT'S TEN MILLION DOLLARS TO ME, COMPARED TO ALL THIS AGONY AND UNCERTAINTY —
NO — I'LL NOT DO IT — THEY WON'T GET A CENT — I'LL CARRY THIS CASE TO EVERY COURT IN THE LAND — I'LL STARVE ON THE STREET BEFORE I SEE THEM GET ONE PENNY — AT LEAST I KNOW YOU TWO WILL STAND BY ME —
WE WOULDN'T LET YOU STARVE, BIM —
THERE'S NO DANGER OF THAT, IS THERE?
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off., Copyright, 1934, by The Chicago Tribune.

DICK TRACY Disarmed

YOU WONDER HOW I KNEW STEVE WAS HERE AND HOW I LOCATED YOU? WELL, I WAS WITH DICK TRACY WHEN STEVE BROKE JAIL AND I TRAILED HIM HERE.
OH, YOU DID, EH? WELL, YOU'LL REGRET THAT DAY!
I LISTENED AT YOUR REAR DOOR AND HEARD YOU PHONE FOR THE DOCTOR. I OVERHEARD THIS BOUNDER SAY THAT THE DOCTOR YOU CALLED COULDN'T COME, AND A SUBSTITUTE WOULD BE SENT.
WHO WAS THE SUBSTITUTE? WHAT DID YOU DO WITH HIM?
HERE I AM! I WRIGGLED LOOSE FROM THE ROPES THAT BIRD TIED ME WITH! WHO IS HE?
IF IT AIN'T "HUMP"!
LL WILL TELL YOU WHO HE IS. MEANWHILE, KEEP 'IM COVERED WITH THIS ROD WHILE I REMOVE A WRIST GUN HE'S GOT STRAPPED TO HIS ARM — THEN WE'LL FIGURE WHAT TO DO WITH HIM.

Walt Mason, Himself

The Dick.

We read about some crook's bereavement—the law wrote "Finis" to his trail; the dicks have scored a big achievement; they've put an outlaw in the jail. They're lauded by the righteous voters, whose interests they ably serve, and for a time they are the toters of laurel wreaths they well deserve. Then eager youths of high ambition resolve, when grown, they will be dicks and help improve the world's condition by running down the sinful hicks. But when they start investigating, and question peelers in the town, they find the sleuths are all berating the sort of job they must hold down. "Oh, now and then we pull some capers," the old dick says, "and gain applause and get such tributes in the papers as make us feel like Santa Claus. But most of it is weary drilling out in the darkness and the storm, while rain pours down and keeps on filling our shoes with water far from warm. The most of it is painful freezing when winter camps down in the street, and catching beastly colds and sneezing, and longing for a warm retreat. Oh, now and then we're robed in glory; we take home laurels in a cart; but mostly it's a ghastly story of grim routine that breaks the heart."
